Not sure if I fully agree with the author but, he does raise some good points.

Great articles Bill!

While I agree with him from a designer perspective - creatives are getting too boxed into the framework of the web (they have for a long time!), they should understand the medium better so they know how to break it to suit their design goals - I also agree with his response piece of appropriate design for the need or use.

Part of the "blandness" we see today also ties into usability...moreover an ease of use for the reader. The consistency and plain-ness helps users consume the information on the site.

For government sites and content, that is the very goal of what we are here to do. We need our sites to be engaging, but we mainly need them to be clear and understandable for many levels of users. Usability IS the key here over creativity for the sake of creativity.

Would have been very interested if he had assigned his design students some government sites for redesign and then done some user testing :)

I guess I don't care that my site is not necessarily cutting edge design. I worry more that its not useful.

Here's ours for a content strategist.

Content Strategist

Position Purpose: Coordinate messaging and stories, across platforms, that share TVA's mission of service to the Valley. Work with other communicators to maintain content calendar and ensure TVA messaging is shared across internal and external communication vehicles. Develop content for internal and external TVA audiences and vehicles, sharing TVA's vision, strategy and goals, and explaining company programs, business strategy, opportunities, initiatives and issues. Develop and deliver communications for TVA that educate, inform and engage employees, retirees and other stakeholder groups, and ultimately enhances TVA's reputation. Initiate and execute strategic communication plans. Identify speaking engagements that target key audiences. Develop key messaging that resonates clearly with employees, retirees, and external stakeholders.

Principal Accountabilities: Work with other Communications personnel to identify opportunities to share TVA messaging internally and externally. Maintain content calendar to ensure alignment and strategic messaging across platforms for internal and external audiences. Coordinate messaging and stories, across platforms, that share TVA's mission of service to the Valley. Identify key issues and provide strategic communications counsel to help develop messaging that builds awareness, understanding, education and action. Ensure messaging is understandable and relevant to the audience to which it's being delivered, and goes to building understanding and advocacy on behalf of the company, its people, products, services and values. Use available technology appropriate to audience. Collaborate and coordinate with communications colleagues to promote best practices, idea sharing and success for all Communications initiatives. Maintain an understanding of corporate and business unit goals and issues, and industry trends. Assists with development of Communications performance Metrics. Mentors and advises lower level Communications Consultants. Write and edit variety of communications to achieve objectives and deliver results.

Minimum Requirements:

Education — Bachelor's degree in journalism, communications, public relations, English or related fields. An advanced degree is strongly preferred.

Experience — At least 10 years of experience in the communications field or business equivalent (with 3 years corporate communication experience required). Experience should include a comprehensive knowledge of communications systems, including face-to-face, print, multimedia and social media communications tools. Exceptional written and oral communications skills.

Knowledge/Skills/Abilities — Proven knowledge of contemporary communications practices and tools; professional editor-level experience that includes complete editorial responsibility for employee and external communications material; ability to interact persuasively with all levels of the organization; skills in current communications technology; creativity and resourcefulness. Candidate may be required to obtain and maintain a security clearance based on position / access requirements and essential job functions. As one of the leading company in USA, Tennessee Valley Authority opens a variety of opportunities for employees to grow and make them as future leaders of the professional and disciplined. Tennessee Valley Authority also offers a dynamic work environment in order to encourage employees to contribute optimally, and at the same time is able to learn new skills and knowledge through the company program.

And here's a brief one for a content writer/editor (we are also currently looking!).

Content Writer/Editor

Researches, creates, and edits engaging content for all online and mobile channels to tell a compelling company story.

- Work with other communications and marketing personnel to identify opportunities to share company messaging tied to enterprise positions and business unit objectives internally and externally and aligned to the company's content marketing strategy.
- Creates online personas and actively connects with stakeholders through online channels to increase awareness and advocacy for the company's brand. Maintains an updated customer journey map for the company's online community.
- Optimize content for different audiences, ensuring a 'customer first' approach to achieve objectives.
- Maintains consistent voice that represents the brand, adjusting tone and style for each audience.
- Ensure messaging is understandable and relevant to the audience to which it's being delivered, and goes to building understanding and advocacy on behalf of the company, its people, products, services and values.
- Balances business objectives, stakeholder demands, and trending topics with customer expectations to deliver an impactful and meaningful message.
- Ensures content assignments come in, are published, and retired (if applicable) on schedule.
- Supports other departments through collaboration on story ideas, copyediting, and proofreading.
- Analyze results, oversee content testing, and ensure content strategy meets objectives.

Dan, it's a marketing ploy. It will check your PDF and give you a list of errors, but it won't let you fix them. It's similar to the free PDF Accessibility Checker provided by a vendor in Switzerland (Access for All, maybe?).

CommonLook is no doubt a fine tool, and I was intrigued by its demos, but at the places I've worked others who have actually used it have said it was impossible to work with. I strongly suspect that the issues they were having originated between the back of the chair and the monitor, but in each case there was too much institutional inertia to go any further. After all, people had Acrobat, knew how to use it, and were satisfied with the results.

So I would say it is not important, it's worth downloading if you're curious, and if you do download it let us know what you learn.

Thanks!

Brooke, I would add one comment:

The glossary is an exception to the rule that you shouldn't open a link in a new window. People will benefit from seeing the definition and the context side by side, or at least from being able to go back and forth between tabs.

Of course, users vary, so you might want to test in your own environment. But there are two distinctly different situations:

- "I need to look it up so I can continue this task (reading a publication, completing a form...)." In this case, it's often essential to open the content in new window—and I can't think of a situation that would make it unacceptable to open a new window.
- "Take me to this related item, even if it's off your website." In this instance, the new item is part of what should be a seamless flow. Don't add a hiccup to the user experience—or, as it was originally said, don't break the Back button.

In the first case, some of your users will keep the glossary open so they can refer back to it quickly—so be sure the internal navigation works well, too.

Thanks!

Subject: Re: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] SOPs or Best Practices for Glossaries?

Hi Brooke,

I can share a glossary we've built that was a common enough need to be used on several sites: It's a glossary panel that features a persistent link to open it, inline term definitions, and search: <https://github.com/18f/glossary>. I understand that this glossary performed quite well across different sites in user testing.

Examples in use:

- <https://www.fec.gov/data/>
- <https://revenue.data.doi.gov/how-it-works/>
- <https://clinicaltrials.gov/>
- A not-in-use prototype for Clinical Trials

Hope that helps!

Best,

We're in the process of updating and cleaning our online glossary. Does anyone have any SOPs they'd be willing to share around criteria for what goes in the glossary? Or, can anyone point me towards some sort of best practices for websites indicating that having a glossary is actually useful or a way to determine criteria for a glossary?

Some of the decisions we're making feel sort of random and I'd prefer to have more clearly defined criteria for what goes in a glossary. We're a health information website so there are some higher-level words that need definition (i.e. that we cannot rewrite out of the content). While we generally define technical words within the text, enough people use our glossary currently that it appears to be useful.

Thanks for any info folks can provide!

Warm regards,
Brooke

Hi all--

On a related note, I'm wondering about the CommonLook Office plug-in. As I understand it, It's supposed to help you make your Office documents compliant more easily. I'm curious to know if anyone has tried it, and if so, was it any better than the accessibility utilities already built into Microsoft Word, etc?

Thanks,

Dan, it's a marketing ploy. It will check your PDF and give you a list of errors, but it won't let you fix them. It's similar to the free PDF Accessibility Checker provided by a vendor in Switzerland (Access for All, maybe?).

CommonLook is no doubt a fine tool, and I was intrigued by its demos, but at the places I've worked others who have actually used it have said it was impossible to work with. I strongly suspect that the issues they were having originated between the back of the chair and the monitor, but in each case there was too much institutional inertia to go any further. After all, people had Acrobat, knew how to use it, and were satisfied with the results.

So I would say it is not important, it's worth downloading if you're curious, and if you do download it let us know what you learn.

Thanks!

State of Nevada tested the free tool and also Commonlook provided a temporary license to the paid tool for further testing.

Hello,

We build one in Drupal too (D7):

Filterable list page: <https://www.uspto.gov/learning-and-resources/uspto-videos>

Video module: <https://www.uspto.gov/learning-and-resources/uspto-videos/trademarks/basic-facts-selecting-mark>

Video modules embedded onto a regular page: <https://www.uspto.gov/trademarks-getting-started/trademark-basics>

We don't upload video files to Drupal however -- the video module acts as file folder to collect and hold all the info about the video and links to the various elements (a printable transcript, a version on Youtube, a version on our servers).

The module plays the Youtube version, but we tried to put all the other options at a viewer's fingertips, in case they wanted to watch it in a different way.

We also built a "video embed" button into the WYSIWYG editor for our authors. Only a few people can upload and publish videos modules, but once they are in the system anyone can embed them in a variety of ways.

we are about to finish out multimedia library that we built with Drupal. We used Elastic search for the search component. We have not migrated over our youtube content as of yet. I will be happy to have my team demo for you.

Thanks,

For anyone out there I'm looking for examples of video libraries/collections in sites using Drupal. Pretty much anything you're doing that's cool in that area.

Thanks all

Hello, everyone.

Welcome back to our federal colleagues who were furloughed! I know from past experience how disturbing, financially scary, and socially isolating it is to go through a shutdown. I'm very glad you're all back at work and will get paid!

Best of luck remembering your passwords, where the bathrooms are, and the name of the person in the next cubicle.

Thanks Dennis Lapcewich. I visited the website, and scanned the board members. Interesting.

I appreciate the hackers comment. It added an unexpected dimension to my initial emotion on being introduced to staysafeonline.org.

Seems difficult to me, this situation. There's a lot of money being made by those harvesting/trading information all around the place. And it continues to seem to be the sexiest sector in the stock market.

I wonder, can us little fish decrease our activity within internet? Will it be allowed?

Interesting time we live in. Some claim it the 4th Revolution.

I hope there's not another shutdown. I believe there's a need for government. Perhaps income inequality, the free market, and democracy, are interrelated, and not just friends.

Happy Monday.

Content Managers,

The U.S. Currency Education Program's first mobile app has arrived! Money Adventure is a fun, interactive smartphone and tablet app that helps students learn about the security and design features of Federal Reserve notes. This digital tool brings learning to students' fingertips, making Money Adventure a classroom and at-home resource.

Money Adventure has two primary components—a $20 note front explorer and an Augmented Reality (AR) note back explorer. In the note back explorer, students team up with Buck the Time-Traveling Dog on a quest through the historical events illustrated on the back of U.S. currency.

After downloading the app, users can access these features without an internet connection. The app will be Android-accessible in late 2019.

Money Adventure is the mobile complement to our online K-5 Currency Academy platform. Activities and fun lesson plans are free to use, download, and print at www.uscurrency.gov.

In last month's official enactment of the IDEA Act, the language needs some clarification on which sites need to implement/follow the US Web Design Standards. It states in Section E:

"COMPLIANCE WITH UNITED STATES WEBSITE STANDARDS.—Any website of an executive agency that is made available to the public after the date of enactment of this Act shall be in compliance with the website standards of the Technology Transformation Services of the General Services Administration"

Can someone from GSA clarify if "made available to the public..." means:

1. Any government site that merely exists to the public ...OR...
2. Any government site that is launched to the public.

Two very different things since the first would apply to any & all government websites that are publicly accessible and the second would be really limit it to NEW sites not yet existing.

Interested to know that as well, since we're redoing our site (been in the works for a while) and will launch first half of this year (projected). If we need to implement these web standards (I assume this is a reference to the U.S. Web Design System at <https://designsystem.digital.gov/> correct?), I'd rather know now and minimize the "extreme makeover" that it will take as we get down the road toward launch.

I'd ask further on Scott's (2) below to clarify "launch" – an absolutely new site never existing, or any new version of an existing website released after the date of the Act.

An Agency I am marginally affiliated with is looking to do a complete website redesign. New hardware, software, move to cloud hosting, updated CMS, updated database, personalization features, etc. It will use existing content from the legacy site but will have a completely new look and feel and be fully "responsive". It is not a eCommerce site but it does collect user information for mailings, emails, customer relationship etc and users can create an "account".

The requested budget figure I saw being kicked around was astronomical and potentially bordering on "waste" if it goes through.

You can email me directly and I won't share your name or agency with anyone -- but if anyone can share with me a reasonable total budget number that your federal agency used for a massive redesign like described above please let me know. I need to gather some "Market Research" so I can validate of this estimate I saw was reasonable or if it is high-- this number would be just for everything involved with the new build , implantation and initial year of hosting licenses etc -- no out years yet.

I will not share anything you give me -- I'm just looking for total budget numbers.

I can send over some of the market research I had done while I was at USFWS if you want re Budgets. I know Larry Gillick at DOI has a ton of budgetary numbers, all of which he has present to a wide cross-section of the drupal community at various cons so I imagine he would also be happy to share with you.

I'm going to throw a few thoughts (not numbers) your way.

1) Often the cost of moving from one technology (ex: CMS) to another is the cost of converting from one system to another. THESE costs should be REDUCED by the fact that the new site can be optimized for the new technology without ever having to work for the old.

2) Cost is going to depend a lot of things you don't mention:

- How big is the site? Is it multiple domains, or just one? Is it 500 pages, 50,000 pages, or 5,000,000 files?
- Does the site need 5 9 availability (up 99.999% of the time) or is, say, 98% availability enough? Each 9 can drastically change your cost
- Does the site have special security considerations? Again, the more, the higher the cost.
- Are there time constraints (all this has to be done in 6 months... or 3 years?)
- For the redesign

- Do you have user research? If not, you will need to add time for this (cost)
- Do you have named representatives for each of your stakeholder groups lined up? (will this introduce delays? Example: These 5 people need to approve the design, and they aren't all available until May 2020)

3) Don't neglect cost for maintaining the old site while spinning up the new one (the dual edit phase).

4) Responsive should be a part of any current design, so it shouldn't be something like, "oohhh, you want a responsive design, well that's going to cost 5x more." (caveats, personal opinion there)

Hello all,

My agency needs to start writing a new statement of work for our website contract. Our present website is currently on a proprietary content management system that is owned by our current contractor. This contract will be put out for bid in the next 6 months or so.

Can others who have web contracts send me their statement of works or performance work statements as well as what their web contract looks like. This would be most helpful to us as the original contract was constructed by people who are no longer with the agency.

Thank you in advance for your assistance.

Cheryl has great points. And her caution on making your site responsive is no longer just her "personal opinion". Congress just signed into law the "21st Century IDEA act" which codifies several requirements for new sites, including being "fully functional and usable on common mobile devices".

The exploration of how to interpret elements of the act has already begun over on this list and other lists, but it's a good thing to reference and keep in mind if you are undertaking any new website work....

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] complete Website Redesign -- budget?

I'm going to throw a few thoughts (not numbers) your way.

1) Often the cost of moving from one technology (ex: CMS) to another is the cost of converting from one system to another. THESE costs should be REDUCED by the fact that the new site can be optimized for the new technology without ever having to work for the old.

2) Cost is going to depend a lot of things you don't mention:

- How big is the site? Is it multiple domains, or just one? Is it 500 pages, 50,000 pages, or 5,000,000 files?
- Does the site need 5 9 availability (up 99.999% of the time) or is, say, 98% availability enough? Each 9 can drastically change your cost
- Does the site have special security considerations? Again, the more, the higher the cost.
- Are there time constraints (all this has to be done in 6 months... or 3 years?)
- For the redesign
 - Do you have user research? If not, you will need to add time for this (cost)
 - Do you have named representatives for each of your stakeholder groups lined up? (will this introduce delays? Example: These 5 people need to approve the design, and they aren't all available until May 2020)

3) Don't neglect cost for maintaining the old site while spinning up the new one (the dual edit phase).

4) Responsive should be a part of any current design, so it shouldn't be something like, "oohhh, you want a responsive design, well that's going to cost 5x more." (caveats, personal opinion there)

An Agency I am marginally affiliated with is looking to do a complete website redesign. New hardware, software, move to cloud hosting, updated CMS, updated database, personalization features, etc. It will use existing content from the legacy site but will have a completely new look and feel and be fully "responsive". It is not a eCommerce site but it does collect user information for mailings, emails, customer relationship etc and users can create an "account".

The requested budget figure I saw being kicked around was astronomical and potentially bordering on "waste" if it goes through.

You can email me directly and I won't share your name or agency with anyone -- but if anyone can share with me a reasonable total budget number that your federal agency used for a massive redesign like described above please let me know. I need to gather some "Market Research" so I can validate of this estimate I saw was reasonable or if it is high-- this number would be just for everything involved with the new build , implantation and initial year of hosting licenses etc -- no out years yet.

I will not share anything you give me -- I'm just looking for total budget numbers.

Hello Colleagues!

I wanted to share a couple of new resources now available on DigitalGov - sorry for the delay, back furlough this week.

Designing for Translation is a blog post about simple steps you can take to make sure that your English language content would work well if / when it needs to be translated to another language - it's all about planning ahead of time and saving unnecessary headaches.

A while back, I put a call for bilingual glossaries and you all responded, thank you!! We now have a new page called: Bilingual Glossaries, Dictionaries, and Style Guides with all the entries I received. Hi Simona, Recommend that you also check the Accessibility Requirements Tool \(ART\) to find sample language related to accessibility requirements for IT procurement. Including accessibility requirements in your procurement documentation will help ensure contract deliverables are accessible, and help your agency remain in compliance with Section 508.

Good luck with your procurement!

I'm consulting with a State Agency that's under a Consent Decree to make their public website accessible. The Agency has a number of grantees and other partners that provide reports and other documents that then get posted to the Agency's website to provide transparency to the public. The Agency policy going forward is that only accessible documents and other attachments will be posted to the public website.

I'm looking for language to put into the grant documents, RFPs and MOUs (memorandums of understanding) requiring the submitted documents be accessible at the time of submission, thus placing the onus to make the documents accessible on the submitters (many of whom are already subject to Section 508 or the State law equivalent but don't care), not the Agency. Also stating that inaccessible documents received will be returned to the submitter for remediation without being posted to the website.

Anyone have some legal speak that addresses accessible documents?

There are many different approaches to writing acquisitions and contracts, including grants. While as an acquisition professional I have provided detailed RFI, RFP, SOW, and SOO language, making it clearer for grantees and non-federal or volunteer organizations seemed to have work best for end results. In certain instances, training may need to be developed to enable the willing to self-evaluate and improve their quality of submissions.

Full Inclusion for All People

The AGENCY is committed to making its electronic and information technologies accessible to individuals with disabilities by meeting or exceeding the requirements of Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act.

We require teams (grantees, vendors) work to ensure all electronic information and communication technology (ICT) systems, applications, web page content, reports, and deliverables should be accessible to people with disabilities (per Accessibility Requirements (Section 508) and best practices (W3C WCAG 2)).

Where not fully compliant with the technical standards, teams should be prepared to provide clear points of contact to assist users in obtaining alternate formats, plan for fixing any defects (non-compliant items found) in coordination with vendor, development, or integration teams, and work with project staff to develop accommodation plans should users not be able to gain access or use the system due to non-conformance with the Section 508 technical standards.

A representative from the team should be provided as appropriate to the system, document, or electronic information content provided to us. Statements should notify end-users that if they require assistance or wish to report a complaint related to the accessibility of any content on this website, please email at: <insert program help desk or point of contact (POC) here> and asking that if applicable, please include the web address or URL and the specific problems encountered.

Legal References and Best Practices

IT Accessibility Standards as outlined in Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended (29 U.S.C. §794d): <http://www.access-board.gov/the-board/laws/rehabilitation-act-of-1973> and <http://www.access-board.gov/guidelines-and-standards/communications-and-it/about-the-section-508-standards/section-508-standards> do not proscribe a required way to test for conformance, however best practice is to target Web Accessibility Initiative's Web Content Accessibility Guidelines 2.0 Level AA (<http://www.w3.org/WAI/WCAG20/quickref/>) to develop test plans and integrate techniques into development processes to support accessibility in the IT documents, products or services.

Vendors and individuals testing for accessibility may also be interested in the DHS Section 508 Compliance Test Process for Applications (http://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/DHS_Section_508_Compliance_Test_Process_for_Applications), which defines a consistent, repeatable process for standardized accessibility testing and evaluation. Should any disagreement occur on what is acceptable, this process is a likely to be used in determining technical conformance of any IT deliverable.

Regarding Contract Scope & RFP Responses

Some agency requirements are technical, verbose, and do not clearly explain the purpose of a VPAT.

Concerned with the legal issues of the contract and not necessarily outlining how that is performed, a typical language example might be: “At a minimum, solicitation respondents must succinctly indicate and explain or justify to what extent and how their proposed EIT deliverables meet or, in some cases, are not applicable to at least those specific technical provisions, functional-performance criteria, and information, documentation, and support requirements listed in 36 CFR 1194.21, 1194.22, 1194.24, 1194.31, and 1194.41, respectively, of the associated accessibility information for each deliverable.”

Good practice is to ensure contract also is clear such that both parties know what is expected:

All tasks for testing of functional and or technical requirements must include specific testing for Section 508 compliance. Teams must document applicable standards evaluated and document acceptable testing. The Agency reserves the right to testing of EIT functional and or technical requirements to determine Section 508 compliance. Our agency will use DHS Section 508 Compliance Test Process for Applications to make that determination.

Inaccessible documents received and determined to not be compliant will be returned to the submitter for remediation without being posted to the website.

Additional Guidance on Documentation

Electronic documents, such as training, user guides, ongoing status reports, and invoicing must be accessible. While the accessibility of a specific format may influence the accessibility of specific document types, the best practice is to target Web Accessibility Initiative’s Web Content Accessibility Guidelines 2.0 Level AA (<http://www.w3.org/WAI/WCAG20/quickref/>) and test appropriately.

Adobe PDF Accessibility

There are many products that produce PDF formats, and that format supports many different types of content. Although Adobe is not the only vendor, they are most commonly used and vendors should expect “Tagged PDF required”: In order to provide accessibility, the document must be tagged. To check for “Tagged PDF”, open the Document Properties (File > Properties > Description) or run the Accessibility Full Check. If “Tagged PDF: No” is found in Document Properties or if “Tagged PDF” fails in the Accessibility Full Check, then the PDF is not tagged. AGENCY utilizes this tool to determine compliance with PDF accessibility.

Hopefully that provides at least a meaningful outline.

SERIES & GRADE: AD-0301-00 Social Media Specialist (Office of Communications)

SALARY: $68,036.00 - $88,450.00.00

POSITION INFORMATION: Full Time Excepted Service (This is an Administratively Determined position under the authority of 20 U.S.C. Section 9105(b). Competitive Civil Service is not acquired under this appointment.)

PROMOTION POTENTIAL: AD-0301-00 (Equivalent to GS-11)

DUTY LOCATIONS: 1 vacancy - Washington DC Metro Area, DC

INTRODUCTION:

The Institute of Museum and Library Services is the primary source of federal support for the nation's libraries and museums. We advance, support, and empower America's museums, libraries, and related organizations through grantmaking, research, and policy development. Our vision is a nation where museums and libraries work together to transform the lives of individuals and communities. To learn more, visit www.ims.gov and follow us on Facebook and Twitter.

This position is located in the IMLS Office of Communications and reports to the head of the Office of Communications (OC). The incumbent will create, enable, and monitor the agency's digital communications strategy and create, manage, and analyze content across all IMLS social media accounts, website, and blog. The incumbent must have excellent writing and editing skills; experience in social media management; and a passion for supporting and showcasing the work of America's museums and libraries. This position will be responsible for developing and executing upon a creative, compelling content strategy that showcases IMLS's work, reach, and national impact, primarily through social media and the IMLS blog.

MAJOR DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES:

Social Media

- Manage IMLS social media platforms and presences, including Facebook, Twitter, Medium, Instagram, YouTube, and LinkedIn. Ensure that messaging and branding on IMLS social media platforms are consistent with IMLS platforms, collateral, and presentations.
- Using research and industry best practices, design and implement social media strategies and campaigns to inform and educate key museum and library stakeholders, the public, and other influencers.
- Recommend, implement, and evaluate social media tactics to deepen the impact and reach of IMLS events, webinars, and meetings, such as Twitter chats and livestreaming.
- Research and monitor current trends in library and museum fields on social and other media. Serve as a resource for staff and IMLS grantees.

- Monitor social media, and recommend and employ methods of social media measurement to determine meaningful and actionable communications outcomes, and identify opportunities for improvement.
- Remain current with social media trends and tools—including attending networking and educational events, reading blogs and news, etc., in order to serve as an agency resource.

Writing and Editing

- Employ strong writing skills in creating and editing original, creative content for social media, blog posts, the IMLS website, and other communications pieces, telling compelling stories that elevate the work of IMLS and its museum and library grantees.
- Serve as an agency resource on plain language and writing skills tailored to various web and print platforms, pieces, and audiences.

Content Strategy

- Use the IMLS Strategic Plan 2018-2022, Transforming Communities, as well as communications industry best practices, to help develop and implement a strategic content plan, including the IMLS blog, website, and social media, to inform and educate key museum and library stakeholders, the public, and other influencers.
- Plan and maintain an editorial calendar and schedule content in coordination with the Office of Library Services and the Office of Museum Services and in consideration of other related agency activities, such as data releases, funding notices, IMLS convenings, staff presentations at meetings, and policy-related activities.
- Identify opportunities for building relationships and engaging with national and policy-focused stakeholders; library, museum, arts, and education reporters, editors, and bloggers; peer agencies; and other influencers.

Email

- Manage official IMLS emails through Constant Contact, including a monthly newsletter, announcements, blog updates, and other content releases.
- Analyze, segment, and maintain email lists to reach key IMLS stakeholders. Develop a tracking system to regularly report on successes and opportunities for improvement.

Internal Support

- Help develop talking points and internal messaging to support IMLS departments.

Interesting. I don't need web access on my cell phone, so I consider only voice contact serious. Otherwise, my laptop access (with a full keyboard) is more capable, so I consider keyboard activity on my laptop a baseline for computing.

It's kind of like years ago when a store or bar did not carry what I wanted or accept the credit card I wanted to use – I figure they missed out, and I saved money. Mobile is not the way I want to spend money. In some ways, slower is cheaper.

The small form factor reminds me of pre-Web 2.0 PDAs, I've had them, but the interface does not work for what I usually want to do around money.

Just curious, how is the data gathered? Is it the webserver's log of requests or something else like Google Analytics?

By the way, how many ways are there to measure count traffic?

Happy Chinese New Year. HmMMM ... Happy Lunar New Year (any kine).

Health and prosperity you all.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Huge Milestone: Majority of Traffic Coming From Mobile Devices

Hi folks,

A huge milestone has taken place: For the first time, analytics.usa.gov is showing the majority of traffic to federal websites coming from mobile devices instead of desktops.

This is an auspicious occasion and definitely an inflection point for all of us! :)

A few further notes:

- One really important caveat is that analytics.usa.gov (and the enormous, powerful data that we can all access from the underlying Digital Analytics Program (DAP)). It's already huge and comprehensive to the point of being authoritative, but it's still incomplete and we need everyone's effort to get it the rest of the way!

- The Pulse website is showing that we're still just at 64% of executive branch domains participating in DAP. We should get this up to 100% !!!! Please, if you work on a website that's not yet participating, reach out to the team and they can help get you onboard just like that! Remember, this is now an OMB requirement (section 2A), but participating also helps to ensure that your team's good work is reflected both publicly and to leadership across gov't. Plus, you then gain access to the full DAP account underneath, which is an incredible resource for understanding how the public uses our websites.
- One other disclaimer is that the mobile vs. desktop stat may be slightly skewed by the government shutdown, when a lot of people weren't at their desks doing their jobs. That said, we were close to 50% late last year, so that may have just accelerated this milestone a bit is all.

Gray B.

Well said Cheryl, I agree with all of your comments.
I would also add that chances are also that you will have some higher fixed costs if you are having internal staff do the migration of content vs hired out.
Good luck to you,

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] complete Website Redesign -- budget?

I'm going to throw a few thoughts (not numbers) your way.

1)Often the cost of moving from one technology (ex: CMS) to another is the cost of converting from one system to another. THESE costs should be REDUCED by the fact that the new site can be optimized for the new technology without ever having to work for the old.

2)Cost is going to depend a lot of things you don't mention:

-How big is the site? Is it multiple domains, or just one? Is it 500 pages, 50,000 pages, or 5,000,000 files?

-Does the site need 5 9 availability (up 99.999% of the time) or is, say, 98% availability enough? Each 9 can drastically change your cost

-Does the site have special security considerations? Again, the more, the higher the cost.

-Are there time constraints (all this has to be done in 6 months... or 3 years?)

-For the redesign

-Do you have user research? If not, you will need to add time for this (cost)

-Do you have named representatives for each of your stakeholder groups lined up? (will this introduce delays? Example: These 5 people need to approve the design, and they aren't all available until May 2020)

3)Don't neglect cost for maintaining the old site while spinning up the new one (the dual edit phase).

4)Responsive should be a part of any current design, so it shouldn't be something like, "oohhh, you want a responsive design, well that's going to cost 5x more." (caveats, personal opinion there)

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] complete Website Redesign -- budget?

An Agency I am marginally affiliated with is looking to do a complete website redesign. New hardware, software, move to cloud hosting, updated CMS, updated database, personalization features, etc. It will use existing content from the legacy site but will have a completely new look and feel and be fully "responsive". It is not a eCommerce site but it does collect user information for mailings, emails, customer relationship etc and users can create an "account".

The requested budget figure I saw being kicked around was astronomical and potentially bordering on "waste" if it goes through.

You can email me directly and I won't share your name or agency with anyone -- but if anyone can share with me a reasonable total budget number that your federal agency used for a massive redesign like described above please let me know. I need to gather some "Market Research" so I can validate of this estimate I saw was reasonable or if it is high-- this number would be just for everything involved with the new build , implantation and initial year of hosting licenses etc -- no out years yet.

I will not share anything you give me -- I'm just looking for total budget numbers.

If you prefer movies to books, you can also watch Ready Player One. It's not as good as the book, but there are some bits of it I like better. The book – which is narrated by Wil Wheaton on Audible, FWIW -- was written before smart phones were ubiquitous, so they updated the movie to reflect the idea of people being on their devices anywhere and everywhere.

There's another series you can check out that also incorporates IoT, AI, machine learning, and smart home devices, rather than just VR. It's called The Beam; it's written by Sean Platt and Johnny B. Truant.

Been there done that and took my Lindens and avatar with me ;-) Seriously, I have been thinking about dipping back into this space. The reasons we left SL was due to the lack of resources to conduct programming and the learning curve was difficult for new people. It was never because there weren't people there who wanted to engage with the U.S. Government. I have friends I made there who are still friends today. I can't same the same for people I met in other online spaces. There is definitely something there that merits to further consideration.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Card Sorting for Info Architecture

Hello,

Can anyone provide any information on any other card sorting tools for information architecture?

I found the Web Category Analysis Tool \(WebCAT\) from NIST but figured there are federal gov friendly alternative tools out there. Any info is appreciated.

Thank you,

Hi Matt!

I think it depends on what you're trying to do. At TTS/18F we use two tools:

If you're looking to test your IA, I suggest OptimalSort.

If you need a tool to collaborate on building or mapping something existing out, we use Mural, which is a more open-ended collaboration tool, but we use it a lot for IA-type work.

Cheers,
Cordelia

We have also used the card sorting from Optimal Workshop. We had Usability Testing conducting via a vendor and they too used card sorting with Optimal Workshop. We have since redesign our intranet and are working on our public site this summer. The links below are helpful and worth purchasing.

Hi folks,

Do any of you have experience with switching from Red Hat Linux over to Centos Linux (also owned by RedHat but minus the support package)? If so, did your agency opt to supplement with an additional support package or to rely on the user group community when issues cropped up? If you'd prefer to share offline, please email me directly and would love to hear your experiences with the transition.

If you or someone you know is looking to join a dynamic web and multimedia team, there is an opening for the position of Digital Information Specialist in the Web and Multimedia Branch within my office at the National Cancer Institute. These are exciting times at the NCI with several interesting projects including a migration to Acquia Drupal and a major digital strategy initiative focusing on search engine optimization. The Digital Information Specialist will:

- Provide expert advice on digital communications concepts and methodologies to enhance the dissemination of information on NCI's programs, priorities, and initiatives.
- Serve as a consultant for improving the way NCI delivers information across its various digital platforms.
- Leverage analytics data and customer-centric principles to improve the quality and impact of NCI's digital communication activities.
- Provide oversight on NCI's digital communication channels to ensure compliance with Federal regulations and Institutional and Agency policies, standards, and guidelines.
- Collaborate with other staff to establish policies, standards and guidelines to manage NCI's digital communications, products and content.

We are looking for someone who has UX, information architecture, content management background with a commitment to user-centered design and data-informed approach to web management.

The public (DE) and federal employee position announcements will open on USAJobs on 2/21/2019 and will close on 2/25/2019.

Good morning (b) (6)

If you want a cheap alternative you can use xmind, which does mind mapping, and Trello.com, which is more of a Kanban board. I use both of these to work with customers to jot down all the services they provide and organize them in Trello.com with each column being a topic or category. I then use xmind to map out all the different relationships with each category.

These tools have worked for me in the past and are free.

Hello!

Our team has been working for the last year to complete a deep dive into scams topics to more closely identify pain points and challenges for our audiences. We get a number of inquiries through our various channels and conducted extremely thorough qualitative research on the topic, and over the summer facilitated sessions with our team to come up with potential solutions for our users.

In the last several months, the team has worked to develop a prototype of one of those solutions -- a customized chatbot to help guide users through the major scams reporting issues. Check out Sam, our research findings, and let us know what you think! I also recommend the Federal Communicators Network listserv:

And putting in a shameless plug to our blog: <https://blog.usa.gov/> where we talk about our work, and which we're ramping back up again post-furlough!

Hello folks,

First I just want to say how helpful this list serve is and I'm glad I discovered it while at the NRO. So many very wise folks here. Thanks for getting me smarter. I have a few questions...

- Does anyone know how many agencies/people represent this listserve?
- Would you recommend any other list serves for professionals seeking collaboration in the topics of: branding, marketing, recruitment, social media, communications, technology and strategic workforce planning?

Thanks much and have a great weekend.

Hey all!

We've got 85 boxes of legacy multimedia about to get the boot from their physical storage space. There's a lot of public health communication work in there that I would like to digitize and publish. PSAs about not playing with glass toys from the 70s and 80s and such. I was wondering if anyone has undergone a digitization or digital archiving effort recently and was especially pleased with how it turned out. I don't expect to get much funding for this effort, so if you did it on the cheap or worked in partnership with someone I would love to hear about your experience.

I know this may seem a little out-of-left-field for this group, but this is the first time the agency has attempted a digital archiving project like this and it's my first time trying to do this within government. Turning to your expert-level experience for help. Thanks much!

Best,
Joe

Joseph,

When digitizing records I would definitely reach out to CPSC's Records Officer to determine the records status of any digital surrogates. CPSC's Records Officer is Steven Coney.

If any person here is unsure who their designated Agency Records Officer is, please consult the following NARA website: <https://www.archives.gov/records-mgmt/agency/independent-agencies.html>

Additionally, GSA's Schedule 36 has a list of vendors that perform digitization and other records management needs. This can serve as a starting place to performing market research. I highly recommend reaching out to their team with any procurement questions they have. There are a variety of Special Item Numbers (SIN) within Schedule with SIN 51 506 focusing on document conversion services.

Looks like a good resource. I'd remind/caution anyone that even if the original content predates Section 508 (2001), if you digitize and make it available to your employees or the public, you're probably now going to have to add captioning and audio-descriptions. Digitizing simply to preserve the content on current media formats, for later possible usage, may not invoke accessibility requirements. Often times, you need to digitalize film because it's physically falling apart and needs to be preserved. Check with your agency's 508 coordinator.

Good morning from the Federal Data Strategy team!

Has your agency used data to solve a problem in a creative way? Or do you work with data or know someone working to solve federal data problems? The Federal Data Strategy (<https://strategy.data.gov/>) team is looking for proof points as part of the incubator project.

These are stories by practitioners for practitioners, written in the style of the Harvard Business Review, and will be published on the Federal Data Strategy website. Some examples of topics include (but are not limited to): prioritizing datasets for release, experience assessing the privacy/disclosure risk of a given data asset, experience setting up a standard data sharing approach, using data to make a significant impact (save money, save time, create new products etc.).

We will work with you and your team to develop the stories. This is a great way to share your knowledge with your peers and highlight the important work you do every day.

For further details please contact (b) (6) @omb.eop.gov or me (rgiura@ftc.gov).

If you have content that has already been published and illustrates the impact of data produced by your agency please include the link or document.

Thank you!

Hi Kimberly,

Lots to choose from. There's a natural tendency for us in gov't to stray from sounding like we're endorsing products. I've tried a bunch, and all have their pros and cons.

Too long, version:

- Tools can help, but only if you already know what you're doing.
- The best tools give you, the human, some idea of what needs to be fixed WHILE you're working.
- The more "automagic" the tool does, the more likely its missing the boat.

Long-winded version:

I'd start with the most important statement of all: A SAW DOESN'T MAKE YOU A CARPENTER. This bit of grandfatherly* advice means four things:

1. Having a tool doesn't mean you know when, how, and most importantly – when NOT to use it.
2. The more automated a tool, the more likely you are to "cut your finger off" without noticing it - in this case, missing issues that the tool doesn't realize are issues or making judgements about things that need human decisions.
3. One tool is never the only way you achieve compliance. Just like a carpenter, you need a bunch of different saws, let alone hammers, levels, and other tools.
4. Competence comes from knowledge and experience, not tools. Even the best tools don't mean much if you don't understand the basics of accessibility.

When looking for the right tool, there's some things to DO:

- Look for vendors that have accessibility expertise, not just programming skill
- Look for tools that talk about what they DON'T do well
- Look for tools that can help authors/developers fix things themselves.
- Recognize that different file and content types (PDFs, dynamic data visualizations, etc.) often need different tools to assess.
- Manage your expectations about tools' capabilities. Things like dynamic JavaScript are always a challenge – and can be coded "right" but still not work in practice.
- Backstop tool use with human review, ideally including users with disabilities.

And some things to AVOID:

- Getting a tool to "solve" your compliance
- Getting a complicated tool and not managing, training and supporting it.
- Measuring your compliance solely via tools.
- Using tools that scan your site or content AFTER its posted.
- Choosing tools that don't allow you to see or modify the rules it uses, or to exclude content you know is not perfect but has been manually verified.

The tools I USE (note: no particular order):

Office Docs: Office Accessibility Checker

PDF: CommonLook Pro (Desktop version)

HTML (CMS/Static pages): WorldSpace Comply
ANDI

HTML (development): FireEyes (WorldSpace Attest)
Tenon.io

Functional Testing:

Keyboard

High Contrast browser plugin (Chrome)
WAVE (especially good for headings and structure!)
ZoomText Reader (it catches stuff that JAWS "fixes" for you)
JAWS
Dragon NS Medical (cuz I work at CDC)

Hope this helps.

I have low vision and my favorite accessibility is simply Mac software. Their software is much more intuitive and accessible friendly and always has been. Unfortunately our (Army) techies refuse to provide a Mac machine claiming they can't be used on Army systems (not true but easier than having to learn a new system for the techies). So I've got to use Windows software which is very bad. I'm also on seizure medication and have told them that for some reason too technical for me to understand Macs screens, Iphones and Ipads don't bother me. But using Windows makes me feel as if I'm going to have a seizure. My solution for this is to look away from the Windows monitor and just use my personal Iphone for most things. Their answer is to get me a larger monitor instead of the Ipad I requested.

Thanks.

Hi Kimberly,

I suppose it depends on what you mean by the question.

I'm a fan of HTML Code_Sniffer. I'm not sure how compliant it is; but for a sighted person, it's pretty cool -- and I'll take its UI over WAVE any day.

Sometimes, I like to take surgical strikes on my site and purge it of particular snippets of offending code. I generally use Scrutiny to find the snippets I'm after.

To add to all of this:

1. Always do manual checks! Some stuff like color contrast or reading level cannot be easily automated.
2. Remember that different folks with disabilities might want different and conflicting things – for example, I have light sensitivity that makes Windows way easier for me, but some other folks have a better time with Mac. So there is no one-size-fits-all approach.

I use 2 tools on a regular basis.

1. SiteImprove does a scan of all our websites every week. It provides us information on broken links, misspellings but most importantly accessibility issues. The cost is based on number of pages. It also scans the PDFs. It shows the errors and provides links to the WCAG page(s) with information regarding the errors. SiteImprove also has free training on their website that I've thought was informative – it covers a wide range of accessibility issues.
2. WebAIM has a color contrast checker where you enter the background and text colors and it lets you know if they comply with the WCAG standards. <https://webaim.org/resources/contrastchecker/> They also provide training but it is in Utah.

Hi everyone,

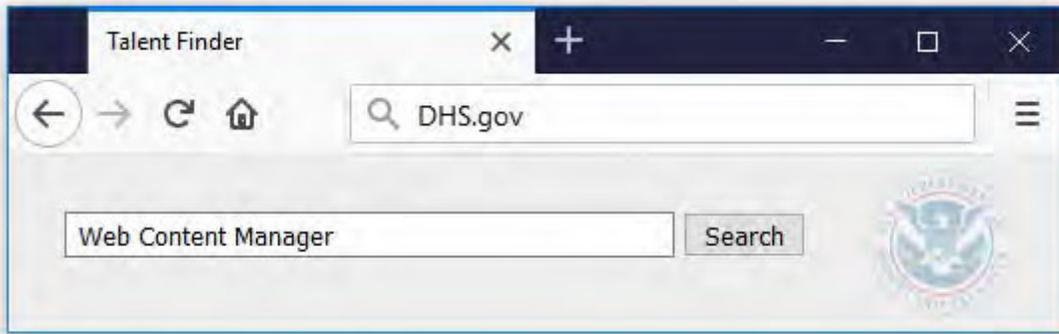

Curious to hear what platforms/tools different agencies are using to manage their outreach programs. We are especially interested in those using an inbound marketing platform that is an all-in-one solution and has such features as email, social media, editorial calendar, landing pages, and AI management to name a few.

Please feel free to directly email me with any information you have to contribute!

Good morning,

I am sending a short note to inform you about GSA's Code.gov listserv. We are using it to create a community of .gov and .mil folks interested in federal government source code and code in general. Everyone can post questions, comments, events, etc.

All are welcome to join and can do so by sending a message to code@gsa.gov.

Apologies if you received this message previously in another forum.

Best,
Amin

I have a friend who swears by screaming frog. Not so much for accessibility but for debugging and analysis. It finds metadata, underlying content, broken links and a bunch of other stuff.

Hi Kimberly,

I suppose it depends on what you mean by the question.

I'm a fan of HTML Code_Sniffer. I'm not sure how compliant it is; but for a sighted person, it's pretty cool -- and I'll take its UI over WAVE any day.

Sometimes, I like to take surgical strikes on my site and purge it of particular snippets of offending code. I generally use Scrutiny to find the snippets I'm after.

I was impressed with a briefing we got from Salsa Labs about their engage platform – it is more than email blasts... It is a CRM that is right sized for a focus on marketing. It also integrates with Salesforce well I am told.

Alas, we put a pin in the project for now due to other priorities, but I thought I'd pass along some of their material for anyone on this thread who is looking now...

Also: below are a couple videos of success stories they passed along...

- Achieva, who was using a hodgepodge of tools before finding Salsa.
- Environmental Working Group who needed to grow supporters through the internet and convert those who just read the content into donors.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Seeking Marketing Platform Information

Hi everyone,

Curious to hear what platforms/tools different agencies are using to manage their outreach programs. We are especially interested in those using an inbound marketing platform that is an all-in-one solution and has such features as email, social media, editorial calendar, landing pages, and AI management to name a few.

Please feel free to directly email me with any information you have to contribute!

Thank you in advance!
Claire

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

A

A/B testing (forms): the ability to test multiple versions of the same form and automatically serve out the most effective version.

Access grants to support: allows support staff to request administrative access to an organization during the course of their support tasks.

Additional fields: pre-defined fields that are common enough to warrant normalization but not common enough to be default fields used by all customers.

Additional filters (donations): the ability to restrict a list of donations to only one-time or recurring.

Additional segment data points: add in ability to segment based on a wider range of data points.

Advanced search: the ability to keyword search beyond fields currently available. Believed to be required for tagging.

Advocacy report: an aggregate report of all advocacy.

Ad Hoc: Arrange a report for a very specific activity.

Affiliation: the ability to temporarily or permanently affiliate with another organization in a sibling relationship and share data between affiliated organizations.

Appeal: What stimulated the donor to donate? Spring Appeal Mailing, an Event, an online campaign, etc...

API: application program interface to allow third-party development using Ignite data.

Asset management (documents): the ability to upload and include documents such as PDF and DOC files for use in forms and emails.

Automated report delivery: the ability to specify a repeating weekly or monthly time where a report will be run, exported to an external file and then emailed to specified recipients.

Available targets... media: the ability to target national and local media outlets.

C

Campaign: Name of goal you are raising the funds to support - and normally has a goal attached to it. (ie Building Campaign). Can also be General or Annual Campaign.

Cultivation: A powerful module inside of Salsa CRM. Sometimes referred to as "Moves Management", cultivation allows users to build customizable workflows for any processes including projects, grants, major gifts, events, etc.

C

Chapters: the ability to group together organizations in a parent-child relationship and share data with a large national organization.

Click-to-call: the ability to target public officials via a person-to-person call.

Conditional content: the ability to customize blocks of content within an email based on whether the supporter matches one or more specified criteria.

Collaboration: the ability to create and share content between affiliated organizations.

Confirmation emails: the ability to send a transactional email after a success submission of a petition or targeted letter.

Copy as...: allows objects to be copied and used as the base for a new object (such as copy and email as the start of a new one).

Customize list columns: allows customers to customize the data shown in each list view.

Custom layouts: the ability to create and save a layout for future organization use.

Custom message series: the ability to create a message series using custom start and end conditions.

Custom receipts: the ability to create additional receipts that are custom to specific forms.

Custom reporting: the ability to create a custom report. The customer chooses the entity to report on (such as Supporter), then specifies criteria that the entity must match to create the dataset. Once the dataset is set, the customer can then select which fields are to be shown in the report, the data format for the report and whether any charts are to be included. If charts are included, the customer specifies which fields are charted along what dimensions. The report is then generated and can be saved for future use.

Custom reports (additional charts): additional charts available to custom forms.

Custom reports (matrix format): similar to summary, but allows a customer to group rows and columns together.

Custom reports (summary format): allows a customer to group rows and view subtotals in their custom report.

Custom targets: the ability to enter a target for use in targeted letters. Will only work to be targeted via email.

Custom target groups: the ability to create groups and assign targets to them for later use.

Custom unsubscribe page: ability to visual edit the unsubscribe page.

D

Drupal integration plug-in: a plugin that allows organizations to select, preview and insert their widgets into Drupal pages.

E

Email archive pages: the ability to publish an email as a web page.

Export donations, Quickbooks format: ability to export donations in the Quickbooks IIF format.

Export supporters (custom): the ability to create an on-the-fly custom query of supporters that is to be exported.

Export petition signatures: the ability to export a list of people who signed a specified petition as well as the comments they left.

F

Filter report to selected segment: the ability to restrict the underlying data of a default report to a certain segment of supporters.

Fund: Often classified as either "restricted" or "nonrestricted". Where, specifically, will the money be spent?

G

Groups/Segmentation: Place constituents in groups to segment your database. Segment on like characteristics, event attendees, etc. Groups can be searched and pulled back in total on the search screen. Constituent Groups are very dynamic and useful for searching and reporting.

I

Import donation history: the ability to import donation transaction history from another system.

Import top-line supporter donation information: ability to import key supporter metrics used for segmenting based on donation history - largest donation, last donation, average donation, etc.

In Kind Gift: instead of giving money to buy needed goods and services, the goods and services themselves are given.

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

L

List management series: a default message series that attempts to re-engage supporters that haven't been engaged.

List management toolset: monitor their list health and perform bulk actions to clean up their audience base. Key features include the ability to identify and remove high-risk supporters (based on bounces, unsubscribes and negative activity), reconcile supporters that have two or more records and undelete supporters that were previously removed.

LYBUNT: Last Year But Unfortunately Not This (year). Reports on donors history based on timeframe you enter. This is a valuable report for identifying and contacting potentially falling away donors.

M

Multi-step (all forms): the ability to create forms that proceed through distinct steps that are dependent on the previous step.

O

One-click actions: the ability to provide one-click petition and targeted letter functions via an email ask.

One-click donations: the ability to provide one-click donations from email asks

On-the-fly segments: the ability to create a disposable segment for use in a single instance.

I have used Screaming Frog personally but we tend not to use products built or supported in other countries due to licensing and potential security concerns. We have licensed Monsido on an enterprise basis and found the tool very easy to use and super helpful.

Hi Kimberly,

I suppose it depends on what you mean by the question.

I'm a fan of HTML Code_Sniffer. I'm not sure how compliant it is; but for a sighted person, it's pretty cool -- and I'll take its UI over WAVE any day.

Sometimes, I like to take surgical strikes on my site and purge it of particular snippets of offending code. I generally use Scrutiny to find the snippets I'm after.

Hey there, just wanted to let everyone know about the USGS's Powell 150 celebration of John Wesley Powell adventuring from Wyoming down through the Grand Canyon 150 years ago. There's going to be events that happen over the next few months as well centered around this anniversary.

I'd like to encourage you to have a little fun this week coloring a Paper Powell, taking a pic with him somewhere, share it to your social media and hashtag it #powell150 for a chance to be featured by the USGS. You can download the Paper Powell on our site: <https://usgs.gov/powell150>. We'd love to see other organizations have some fun with this as well...looking at your National Park Service!

Hi all,

I hope everyone is having a great day so far! I'd like to know what different tools agencies are using for project management and collaboration. If you are using any tools, are they FedRAMP certified? We are interested in using a tool that include forms, dashboards, has a feature for comments, and can help manage small or large-scale projects.

Please feel free to directly email me with any information you may want to share.

Thank you!

Subject: [UX-COP] Crowdsourcing SBA.Gov Digital Product Query

Colleagues,

My team is in the midst of completing our modernization efforts of the SBA.gov platform from a website to a curated digital product. Over the year ahead we will be unveiling a number of new tools and features...to cater to our annual 14 million visitor base.

I am crowdsourcing answers, for a problem my team is digging into, from the greater Fed Inno and Digital communities...

Prompt:

Our old Drupal 7 Events tool was entirely custom built to allow for an SBA specific editorial workflow, this entails the following:

- District Office staff need the ability to create, publish and approve events by a set (District) group on the system
- SBA Resource Partners need the ability to enter events into the system to be reviewed by their District Officer

Existing out of the box solutions we investigated - (Eventbrite & others) do not possess the ability for such a sophisticated editorial workflow as described above. The three most important technical considerations for a third party solution are:

- Authentication/authorization issues,
- Security implications of consuming data from another system
- The robustness of the API.

As such, the event input and creation will likely be the most complex and time-consuming element of this project as we will need to custom built a similar type of solution for Drupal 8

Any ideas or solutions y'all might have (or know of) wrt your efforts that my team may want to look into?

Also any feedback you might have, is always welcomed wrt www.sba.gov platform

Thanks and Best

Does anyone include a "safe exit" button anywhere on their websites? And if so, what (if any) criteria do you have for using it?

For folks who are unfamiliar with a safe exit button, as it's been explained to me it's for potential victims to have a one-click way to get to a safe website like weather.gov in case their potential abuser sees them looking for information. I understand that many sites that provide direct services for victims use a safe exit button, but I'm hoping someone here has explored the best way to approach this so we can learn from you!

Thanks in advance for any information you can share!

Best.

Unless such a button also clears or obfuscates the browser history or provides some sort of special functionality, it is always faster to close the window, tab, or phone screen rather than wait for a server to respond and then send the user elsewhere. I would be cautious about rolling out a feature that provides less protection than existing functionality while promising more.

Good morning,

This exit button feature offers another opportunity for safety. When considering safety and security, it is important to have redundancies, multiple options, to help ensure someone can activate the strategy.

Some Exit Buttons have a few features to it and work to be a less obvious response in relationship to closing a window or tab. And, most sites that offer the button also recommend a reader use a “Safe Computer”; however, recognize that is not always a possibility for persons who would need the safe button. As you consider using one, I found a few short articles that may be of support to you.

Although this article is from Australia, it offers good visuals:

How to increase internet safety with a quick exit button

<https://www.infoxchange.org/au/news/2018/05/how-increase-internet-safety-quick-exit-button>

This article offers strategies for addressing the Back button” and browser history items:

Giving Users a Quick Disguised Exit From a Website

<https://css-tricks.com/website-escape/>

You can test one out here and see how quickly the page loads:

Domestic Violence Homicide Prevention

<https://jeannegeigercrisiscenter.org/domestic-violence-homicide-prevention/>

This page informs the reader that the information would show up on the browser history and offers the exit button:

Jane Doe

<http://www.janedoe.org/>

I hope this is of support to you as you consider next steps!

Sincerely,

Madeline

So, there is an existing company that is using D7 and D8 to do ticketing. Mission Tix <https://www.mt.cm> You can reach out to Todd Hurley (if he's still there, have reached out to him since 2017).

Todd@missiontix.com

They did some pretty unique things for ticketing events that sounds pretty similar to what you're talking about. They're like using Eventbrite. They were super responsive, they just didn't meet our use case needs, but they might fit yours, or they might have suggestions on how they built their site that might be useful for you.

Subject: [UX-COP] Crowdsourcing SBA.Gov Digital Product Query

Colleagues,

My team is in the midst of completing our modernization efforts of the SBA.gov platform from a website to a curated digital product. Over the year ahead we will be unveiling a number of new tools and features...to cater to our annual 14 million visitor base.

I am crowdsourcing answers, for a problem my team is digging into, from the greater Fed Inno and Digital communities...

Prompt:

Our old Drupal 7 Events tool was entirely custom built to allow for an SBA specific editorial workflow, this entails the following:

- District Office staff need the ability to create, publish and approve events by a set (District) group on the system
- SBA Resource Partners need the ability to enter events into the system to be reviewed by their District Officer

Existing out of the box solutions we investigated - (Eventbrite & others) do not possess the ability for such a sophisticated editorial workflow as described above. The three most important technical considerations for a third party solution are:

- Authentication/authorization issues,
- Security implications of consuming data from another system
- The robustness of the API.

As such, the event input and creation will likely be the most complex and time-consuming element of this project as we will need to custom built a similar type of solution for Drupal 8

Any ideas or solutions y'all might have (or know of) wrt your efforts that my team may want to look into?

Also any feedback you might have, is always welcomed wrt www.sba.gov platform

Thanks and Best

Hi - I'm looking for any examples out there of a web content checklist for content owners/authors.

The problems I'm trying to solve are probably familiar to many of you:

- content bloat on our websites
- content often posted as documents when it should have been a webpage
- content not owned by anyone in particular
- content not reviewed on any regular basis and should have been updated or removed years ago
- content not in plain language
- content that should never have been posted in the first place

I'm looking to put together a brief checklist for content owners before they get anything posted to get them thinking through some of these issues. Do you have anything, or know of anything like this in your agency? It might be a separate checklist/guidance, or part of your overall web content guidelines or policy. Any suggestions or examples would be very helpful!

Here are our Writing Standards for the web, which address some of what you are looking for: <https://www.hud.gov/sites/documents/PUBSTANDARDSAPPC.PDF>. Comes closest to the checklist you asked for.

Also, we have publication standards that are way more than a checklist, but cover most of our web page requirements. You can pick and choose items for your checklist: <https://www.hud.gov/sites/documents/WEBPUBSTANDARDS.PDF>

Interesting problems.

It's my unpopular belief that the average content owners/authors are not interested in "web content", only "their content".

Perhaps it might be easier to begin by identifying two points of view - ours and theirs. My experience is that many only see "our" stuff, and ignore "their" stuff. Like "my house", and ignore "the neighborhood".

Not sure how to frame this.

Can fellow California state government members of the group share how your department is preparing for AB 434 (https://leginfo.legislature.ca.gov/faces/billTextClient.xhtml?bill_id=201720180AB434) compliance?

We are only starting to tackle this now but our IT and Comms teams tend to disagree on how broad this mandate is (PDFs, for example, and links to hundreds of dated materials that are known to be non-compliant), and beyond that, how to adapt/train for compliance with extremely limited resources.

Thanks!

Does anyone use a Live Chat Feature on their website?
 If so, can you provide, name, pros, cons, time to implement and cost.

Also, if anyone had done a product comparison with any data used to support their purchase, could you send that as well?

I am looking at Live Chat tools that can be accessed via a federal website and can be staffed by employees to answer the users questions both with canned answers and with custom answers (answers provided by the actual SMEs)

GovSummit

Join Drupalers who work for or support the government as site builders, developers, themers, project managers, and support specialists on Monday, April 8 at the Government Summit at DrupalCon Seattle.

The one-day Summit will feature robust content, engaging discussions and dedicated networking time. A selection of the day's events are highlighted below.

- The lead for the US Web Design System will speak about the project and how 21st Century IDEA is impacting digital services in government.
- Learn how to simplify analytics and how use them to guide content decisions.
- Discuss content strategy and content user testing and even run tests against your own site during a usability workshop.
- Hear a business case for Web Components and start building a portfolio during a hands-on workshop.

Space is limited - we encourage you to register today!

Many people today find themselves learning about DevOps by first seeing one of its outcomes and learning about how that outcome came to be. Learning why something is considered to be a part of DevOps is not necessary to implement those pieces of it. However, knowing why something would be considered a part of DevOps, or even why a DevOps strategy is important, and for who, can mean the difference between following and leading in an industry.

In this webinar, Kelly Albrecht will show, using intuition backed by empirical research, why DevOps is the most important technological strategy of our day. In doing so, attendees will gain the understanding necessary to gain buy-in for DevOps at their organization as well as how to know what might fit a DevOps strategy and what doesn't.

DevOps is a journey and how you do it matters too. Attendees will gain insights into how they might start doing DevOps in their organization, or how to progress further if they've already gotten a start.

Overall, attendees of this webinar will leave with a foundational knowledge of DevOps that is sufficient to find their way to continued success in the field.

Hi Content Managers,

I was wondering if anyone had any best practices for HTML sitemaps (the kind for people, not search engines necessarily) or if they're still a good idea to have at all?

I've found a few things on Google from Moz forums and Crazyegg which seemed to indicate there's no harm in having one. I looked at a few agency websites, frequently the sitemaps mirror the primary navigation. Is it helpful to users because then they can see all the options or not so much because they may have already looked through the menu?

Just for context, our site is particularly big and has a lot of subdomains so trying to list every page may not be possible.

Happy Thursday!

Title: Accessible Content Shared Through Social Media

Date: March 26, 2019

1:00 to 2:30 p.m. (ET)

Description:

The next webinar in the Section 508 Best Practices Webinar Series will take place March 26 from 1:00 to 2:30 (ET). The use of social media by federal agencies has become widespread across the federal government. Agencies use social media to promote their mission and to engage members of the public. This webinar will cover how federal agencies can implement social media in an accessible manner. Representatives from the National Institutes of Health (NIH) will share their experiences in ensuring access to various social media sites and platforms. NIH maintains over 60 Facebook pages, 40 YouTube channels, 13 Flickr pages, and numerous Twitter accounts.

The presenters will provide an overview of social media techniques, address common questions, review access issues and solutions, and offer best practices and techniques for making content accessible on various social media platforms, including Facebook, Flickr, Google+, Twitter, and YouTube. They will also cover internal guidance that NIH has developed and other resources on the subject that are available.

Questions can be submitted in advance of the session or can be posed during the live webinar. This session is intended for those involved in generating social media content for government agencies as well as other entities. Participants are encouraged to submit their questions in advance of the session through the registration portal.

Speakers:

- Gary Morin, Program Analyst, NIH Office of the Chief Information Officer,
- Jennifer Dorsey, Social Media Coordinator, NIH National Cancer Institute

Good Morning,

I wanted to know what tools (free or paid) that you currently use for either your Intranet and/or Internet sites to check for broken links and 508 accessibility?

Thanks!

Our team uses SiteImprove for broken links. We have additional local laws in NYC on access, so we do manual checks combined with WAVE/WebAim for access.

Just started using SiteImprove this year.

A bit of configuration tweaking needed at the start, but super helpful.

As mentioned before, you pay for the number of pages that will be scanned. Can be against multiple domains and be filtered down to get the pages you really want (ex: no need to keep 3 year old news articles in your active scan pool).

Lots of knowledge center articles and training - accessibility training is especially nice here.

Sorry I'll be missing everyone this year going to DrupalCon in Seattle.

But if you're a govie or govie adjacent, you should really look into going to the govsummit. It's usually sold out and the higher education one is already sold out, so might be the only chance you get as school board, local govies, state employees, state universities, federal and international govies to gather and better understand the issues presented to all of us.

And also, there are several governments using Drupal like Australia, Germany, and Canada is moving that way. If you haven't looked at their WxT project, I highly recommend it as an example of a modular government project that is continuously improved, maintained and utilized. How often can we say that in government? Did you know the original devs aren't really even associated with the project now?

Have a great Drupalcon everyone.

GovSummit

Join Drupalers who work for or support the government as site builders, developers, themers, project managers, and support specialists on Monday, April 8 at the Government Summit at DrupalCon Seattle.

The one-day Summit will feature robust content, engaging discussions and dedicated networking time. A selection of the day's events are highlighted below.

- The lead for the US Web Design System will speak about the project and how 21st Century IDEA is impacting digital services in government.
- Learn how to simplify analytics and how use them to guide content decisions.
- Discuss content strategy and content user testing and even run tests against your own site during a usability workshop.
- Hear a business case for Web Components and start building a portfolio during a hands-on workshop.

Space is limited - we encourage you to register today!

USWDS Version 2.0.0 Beta 7 was released yesterday

Lucky number 7 has a couple of more breakers 🐛 in there as we tidy up our BEM implementation and get our typography guidance ready for release. But it's not too bad. There are some good fixes, too. Barring a serious problem, we should be set to release 2.0 on April 8th.

2.0 weeks til 2.0!

We really like Screaming Frog as well, both for the customization and the price ☺, but we also use DeepCrawl, which is a SaaS product with API access included, for visualizations and data warehousing. Aside from broken links, it addresses a lot of SEO signals by default; nothing you can't customize in SF, but the API makes it worth its while. You can also purchase a pretty sizeable license on a government credit card.

We also use Screaming Frog's SEO Spider tool for broken links. I post-process with Python into reports.

In addition to the accessibility tools mentioned, I am starting to use the axe add-on for Chrome, did not see mentioned. – Dan Wendling, NLM/NIH/HHS

Just started using SiteImprove this year.

A bit of configuration tweaking needed at the start, but super helpful.

As mentioned before, you pay for the number of pages that will be scanned. Can be against multiple domains and be filtered down to get the pages you really want (ex: no need to keep 3 year old news articles in your active scan pool).

Lots of knowledge center articles and training - accessibility training is especially nice here.

Hi all,

For clarification – this position is in DC at the headquarters in the Humphreys Building. We're one block from Federal Center SW metro. There's a free gym in the building.

And, there are two days of telework per week after the first 90 days. The position announcement says we don't – so ignore that ☺

Regards,
Brooke

I would start out by getting ScrumMaster training and then working from there. Most trainings for ScrumMaster are only 2 days at the most.

In terms of who provides the training, go by the experience and knowledge of the instructor than the vendor providing the training. FWIW I got mine from Cprime in DC from an instructor named Jim (can't recall his last name unfortunately).

We took our training CSM, CPO through Excella Consulting which is based in Arlington. You can take it at their location, or if there are enough folks onsite, they will come to you.

Come join a fantastic and dynamic team in the Office of Innovation of the National Archives.

We're looking for someone to lead our web branch. This individual should be ready to lead a talented team across a broad range of high-impact, high-visibility projects. This individual reports to the Director of Digital Engagement in NARA's Office of Innovation. Come to NARA and work on projects such as:

- Drupal 7/ 8 site development and cloud-based hosting
- Use of APIs to integrate our public-facing systems including the National Archives Catalog (which has over 73M publicly available digital objects) and our Citizen Archivist program.
- User-centric site design
- Mobile First site optimization
- The History.gov platform used to support anyone with a question about US History
- And more..

As part of the Office of Innovation, you will also work closely with offices across NARA in the integration of user-centered design principles to enhance our agency's use of technology to better meet staff and users' needs.

Note that this is a revised posting of an announcement posted last December. Several responsibilities (social media and internal collaboration tools) have moved to another office and are not longer directly overseen by this position.

Details:

Grade: GS-14

Series: 2210 (Supervisory Information Technology Specialist)

Open Period: 04/04/2019 to 04/18/2019

Announcement (Merit Promotion Government-wide): <https://www.usajobs.gov/GetJob/ViewDetails/529658800>

Let me know if you have any questions and please share with colleagues that may be interested.

I would start out by getting ScrumMaster training and then working from there. Most trainings for ScrumMaster are only 2 days at the most.

In terms of who provides the training, go by the experience and knowledge of the instructor than the vendor providing the training. FWIW I got mine from Cprime in DC from an instructor named Jim (can't recall his last name unfortunately).

Our office has been using Excella for product owner and scrum master training/certification. The 2-day courses are really extensive and they feed you breakfast, lunch and snacks that are quite good.

Does anyone have any language for RFPs and contracts I could see regarding accessibility acceptance testing for third-party websites or applications? The current generic State of MD accessibility language basically puts the responsibility on the vendor to deliver an accessible product -- and trusts the vendor to report if it's accessible or not. Needless to say, vendors will say whatever they think you want to hear in order to make a sale, so unfortunately the State has invested in more than one inaccessible product that has been paid for and deployed on the word of the vendor.

Going forward, my agency (whose core function is to work with employees and clients with disabilities) would like to test and approve the products we contract for before payment or final payment is made to the vendor. Is anyone doing anything like this that you know of? If so, can you share the contract language?

I never thought about 3rd party testing. That's a great idea, especially for a product that's going to be used statewide, not just something for my agency. Do you provide the vendors a list of approved companies, or is it up to the vendor to find someone?

Hi all,

You may be interested in attending tomorrow's webinar about how to design a better form!

More information below:

We have a lot of forms in government, and many of them would benefit from better design! An upcoming webinar will look at a form design curriculum created by Caroline Jarrett, a user experience and usability consultant for the UK Government. She is looking for feedback about whether the curriculum contains the right topics and whether it might be useful in the U.S. government. The talk is hosted by the TTS Research Guild and Digital.gov and will be held on Tuesday, April 9th at 2 p.m. ET.

At the community meeting Monday, one of the requests for training was around how to convey to developers why accessibility is important to people using assistive technology. I though I would share two of my favorite W3C resources that I think address this topic quite well.

How People with Disabilities Use the Web
<http://www.w3.org/WAI/people-use-web>

Web Accessibility Perspectives: Explore the Impact and Benefits for Everyone
<http://www.w3.org/WAI/perspective-videos>

The analogy to general computer use (as opposed to just the Web) is straightforward enough. I would prefer that more the examples were work settings.

Hi Ashley – while not agency-wide (we don't have a single agency intranet platform yet), my office is using Drupal hosted internally. We have a Drupal 7 site that we're migrating to Drupal 8 this year. I would love to get to cloud-based hosting at some point, but we're not there yet.

Thanks!

Hello and Happy Friday!

Does anyone here have experience with Privacy Act Statements for third party use? Basically, NGA uses the Yello App downloaded to NGA unclassified IPADS where applicant and event attendance data is stored in the Amazon web services cloud. The app is used as a recruitment events tracker. Does anyone use the Yello App and where they may point me in the direction of their third-party Privacy Act Statement?

Many thanks.

Hi, Terry.

Good to see your name after so many years! :)

I hesitate to speak for GSA (Jacob, you out there?), but my understanding is that TTS hasn't issued standards yet. To avoid just this kind of confusion, they renamed what was originally called the "US Web Design Standards" to "US Web Design System."

Now they're planning how to work with the federal web community to issue standards that we'd all have to follow per the 21st Century IDEA.

Morning all –

There seems to be a lot of confusion around the U.S. Web Design System and whether or not this constitutes the “Standards” referenced in the 21st Century IDEA Act.

To be clear, this are NOT the “standards” referenced in the 21st Century IDEA Act. They may (or may not) end up being part of the standards, but until OMB issues implementation guidance for the IDEA Act, we don’t know. That being said, OMB hasn’t issued the guidance yet, but rest assured that the Federal Web Managers Council is trying to stay as engaged as possible in the process, and we’ll share any and all information as soon as we can with this forum.

Thanks!

Subject: [COP-ALL-GOV] U.S. Web Design System 2.0 Is Here!

Good Afternoon,

My name is Jacob Parcell and my team coordinates a number of the Government-Wide Communities of Practice (COPs) at the U.S. General Services Administration. I wanted to share an announcement that will make government websites more user friendly. If you are not directly involved in the digital space, I hope you’ll share this with a colleague who is.

Today GSA announced the release of the U.S. Web Design System version 2.0 (USWDS 2.0) -- a new foundation for the future of our design system.

See our USWDS 2.0 launch blog post (<https://go.usa.gov/xmCJc>) to check out everything the system has to offer.

Today’s release makes a number of key improvements to the free and open-source design system already used by over 200 federal websites, and reaching over 550 million users annually. These improvements include:

- Applying mobile-friendly design concepts out of the box
- Deploying a color system to help simplify 508 compliance
- Implementing a new design token system, making the USWDS more flexible and adaptable to each agency's unique needs

If you're interested in learning more -- or want to be among the first to know when we release new content or announce new trainings and events around USWDS 2.0 -- sign up for the brand new USWDS 2.0 mailing list by emailing uswds-subscribe-request@listserv.gsa.gov

Other ways to connect with the USWDS:

- Slack - <https://chat.18f.gov/>
- Twitter - <https://twitter.com/uswds?lang=en>
- Email Us - uswds@gsa.gov

Thank you all for your ongoing contributions to improving how the federal government leverages technology in the service of the American people.

Hello all you fine government Drupal gods -

How do you effectively manage your content managers and contributors within Drupal? The issue we're facing is that we have volumes of content that we manage on our sites to include nodes and documents; with the turnover of CMSs, managing accountability back to an OPR is hit-and-miss. As mentioned during the DrupalCon government summit, some organizations like DOI (Thanks, Larry Gillick) have implemented a 'freshness dating' to ensure their content is up to date. We can't get to that point if we don't have a firm grasp on managing the managers.

Taxonomies? Views? Spreadsheets (yikes)? We'd love to learn of your successes -- and failures.

You have put your finger on the huge challenge facing digital publishers. Our SMEs are averse to inline edits and in some case clearance processes require word with track changes –

Some comments from a LavaCon conference last fall really struck home for me:

Enterprise publishing uses strained and outdated processes that rely entirely on manual content transformations to scale channels and capabilities. Friction is everywhere. Time to get honest: #1 way content moves around enterprise is email and word. No single team responsible for omni channel content – just their own channels. No shared semantics – lots of ad hoc workarounds for taxonomy and tags. Publishing the old way turns creative humans into copy/paste robots. Writers spending 50 percent of their time on the mechanics of content instead of the content itself. The experience is overwhelming for authors.

Content teams can't scale fast enough to do what needs to be done – no time for proper QA let alone proper tagging. We are facing massive technical debt in the form of misconfigured and out of date content systems and massive content debt, unstructured, duplicated. Products are all now information products. But orgs still treat content like a 2nd, 3rd class citizen – the last thing people think about, but it is really at the epicenter, what differentiates our companies from the next.

The future of the content supply chain – Nature of content is evolving from static to dynamic, the electricity that empowers our customer experience. What is needed is a platform of strategy informed by standards delivering to systems held up by structure and semantics – the whole thing falls down w/o these two poles. (Cruce Saunders, Founder Simple A [A])

Because I couldn't get by-in for inline editing and have a crappy rich text editor on our platform (Salesforce) to boot, I have solved for this by recruiting a squad of content stewards. We use SharePoint for document management with workflow and have trained them in our processes and tools. The content team then transforms it into HTML using proper packaging for style and usability rules.

It has been a struggle to recruit and retain my "content stewards" but doing this piece is the foundation – With larger organizations it should be a hub and spokes model where there is one person per business unit as your digital POC to herd cats in their organization in my view. You may need some edict from management (i.e. a policy memo/email/charter/etc signed out by the HIPPO Exec in your org) to set this system up to start, but it has huge payoff down the road for accountability and accurate, up to date content. Call this system what you will -- I call it my web governance system – but whatever it is content steward engagement is the price to be paid to get you where you want to be in my view.

If you need to engage with your executives first to get your call to arms memo, I'd recommend coming up with a KPI/risk that helps them frame the problem. A nice chart on how much content is bloat - "redundant old or trivial" - may do the trick – a pie chart of what has been touched in the last six months and what is older and hasn't been is also a good idea. It depends how complicated you

SIX MONTHS AND WHAT IS OVER AND HASN'T BEEN IS ALSO A GOOD IDEA. IT DEPENDS HOW COMPLICATED YOU WANT TO GET AND HOW SIMPLE IT IS TO PULL METRICS.

Good luck with your efforts – It is a noble cause ☺

"Speak of the Devil and He shall come!"

Hi Wayne,

Just a few more logs for this fire, in case they'll help warm your operation.

We have 183 authors & devs (not so many devs). The authors are not "web people," for the most part. Those who are, are their own sort of "interesting," which we can chat about further on.

Before anyone gets the keys to the kingdom (or at least a working login), there's a 1-on-1 (or 1-on-few) training class -- live via screenshared Hangout or in person. We're not sure yet, which is more effective -- and yes, we really should do some testing. I keep a ruleset where anyone can see it (plus a more generalize Digital Media Guide -- but that's another story). I also send periodic all-authors emails.

There's also a shared spreadsheet on our Google drive, containing all sorts of issues found by automated scanners. Scrutiny is a personal favorite (possibly the best £100 of taxpayer money I've ever spent. We're also testing SortSite, so I may be adding that to the spreadsheet, soon.

I offer help where I can and discipline where I must. I'm not above "firing" an author for gross incompetence. "Training is free," I tell our people. We'll do that any day, any time. Just don't carelessly break stuff. Most folks take us up on the help. Most.

I'll admit that authors (like all people) goof sometimes. Usually, we point out errors and let them do the fixing. If it's a light day, we might dive in and make changes ourselves.

By "our," I mean DeRon Johnson and myself. He's more hands-on, these days -- and I'm CC'ing him on this note, in hopes that he'll add to the conversation. He probably has a more intimate knowledge of the goings-on here than I do, at this point.

Good luck with your authors!

Hi everyone.

We're hiring at least two project managers for one of the coolest, most directly customer-service-enhancement projects around: creating online immigration forms and developing services for people with online accounts.

Come work with us as we bring immigration applications into the 21st century. :)

Hi all,

I'm writing to alert you of a change coming to the 1.U.S.A.gov URL shortening service. This service was decommissioned in 2016, but links continued to function and they are still being used by some to link to government sites.

In the next few days (possibly as soon as Monday), links using the 1.U.S.A.gov URL shortening service will no longer forward users to the destination page. Using these links will instead send users to an error page explaining the issue. We strongly suggest you replace any remaining 1.U.S.A.gov links in your materials with go.U.S.A.gov or other shortened links. We're taking this action to meet mandatory government security requirements, such as DHS Binding Operational Directive 18-01, with all of our products. Please see the following instructions if you have created or use any 1.U.S.A.gov links:

If you created a 1.U.S.A.gov URL

The creation of new 1.usa.gov links hasn't been possible for nearly three years. Please stop using 1.usa.gov URLs in your messages. If you need to shorten URLs using a government shortener, use Go.U.S.A.gov.

If you clicked a 1.U.S.A.gov URL

Here's what you can try:

1. If you know the website you were trying to get to originally, you can go directly there and use the search box to try to find the content you were looking for.
2. If you still can't find what you are looking for, you can visit USA.gov to continue your search.

Please use the above language to communicate these changes to your audience or colleagues moving forward.

Thank you!

Hi all,

I am writing to see if anyone else has had challenges creating an “add to calendar” functionality for GovDelivery.

HRSA’s Bureau of Health Workforce regularly hosts webinars for clinicians, sites, and grantees, and we market the webinars through GovDelivery. We would like to send GovDelivery bulletins with a link that subscribers could click to add the date/time of the event to their calendar. We want to avoid having to post the add-to-calendar download file on our website each time (we send these event invitations quite regularly).

I found a tool, Eventable, that provides an add-to-calendar link we can use in GovDelivery, but as far as I know, HHS does not have a TOS with Eventable.

Does anyone out there have any tips for other ways to get that add-to-calendar link in our GovDelivery bulletins? Or has anyone been able to get an approved/signed TOS with Eventable?

Best,
Toby

Hi all –

Just ran across one of those things that we all talk about doing as a best practice but never really think about the REAL impact of... namely, the importance of optimizing web graphics.

We recently had an office prepare some graphics for the main homepage rotator on DHS.gov. For the rotator, we use two graphics – one set for desktop (1280x480px) and one set for mobile (640x240px). The office submitted PNG versions of the graphics that were 858KB and 209KB respectively... so far, so good. Those file sizes seemed to be a bit large to me though, so I ran them through Photoshop and resaved them as optimized JPG images (Photoshop > Export > Save for Web (Legacy) > JPG at 60% quality) and was able to get them down to 163KB and 50KB (respectively).

So... what's the big deal, right? 858KB and 209KB doesn't seem TOO terribly bad... most people have fast connections now, etc. right? (stay with me folks...)

Whereas it doesn't seem like much of a difference to an individual, it makes a HUGE difference to the aggregate.

So, crunching some numbers, here's the impact:

Over the past 30 days, the homepage of DHS.gov has had 3.54 million visitor sessions... 2.13 million on desktop and 1.21 million on mobile (roughly). For the sake of this argument, we're also assuming that since this slide is in the first slot on the DHS.gov homepage rotator, everyone visiting the site will load it. By optimizing the files, we were able to save 695 KB on the desktop version of the graphic and 159 KB on the mobile version of the graphic.

So we do the math:

- Desktop – 2,131,809 sessions - 695KB file differential = 1,481,607,255 KB (1.48 TB)
- Mobile – 1,209,894 sessions – 159KB file differential – 192,373,146 KB (192 GB)

So, by optimizing JUST these two files... we were able to save roughly 1.67 TB of data traffic... which is 1.67 TB of bandwidth we don't have to pay for... all because we took an extra 30 seconds to optimize both graphics. And if your site is fronted by a content delivery network (like Akamai, for example) and you have the ability to dynamically compress images on delivery – even better.

Cool, huh? So next time someone gives you grief about prepping images properly and asks you “what the big deal” is, now you have an answer.

Sometimes it's the little things in life...

There's even a session submitted by the maintainer of the WebForms module in Drupal 8 all about how to use WebForms in Government:
<https://www.drupalgovcon.org/2019/program/sessions/webforms-government>

And I've only highlighted a fraction of what's been submitted so far and there are still 10 days left to submit (11 if you count today, which I'm not).

And we haven't even talked Training yet. We'll have those out in June for folks to sign up for, but to attend training you need to be registered for a ticket for DrupalGovCon. If you've registered for 2018 or 2017, just sign in and get your ticket. If YOU ARE NEW, you need to create a new account.

We're nearing the end of our Email Subscription Tool and are researching some other options. We'd appreciate hearing what others in this group use at their Agencies? Along with that, do you require them to be FedRamp accredited, etc.

We'd welcome any opinions, why you like what you have now, why you hate it, what you wish you used, etc. Other info if you want to share also appreciated, i.e. cost, usage, customer service, config easy/difficult, etc.

Thank you!!

Thanks for the tip, Matt. Our site was grossly underoptimized, so I'm slimming down as we speak. Just in time for beach season.

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Optimizing web graphics

Hi all –

Just ran across one of those things that we all talk about doing as a best practice but never really think about the REAL impact of... namely, the importance of optimizing web graphics.

We recently had an office prepare some graphics for the main homepage rotator on DHS.gov. For the rotator, we use two graphics – one set for desktop (1280x480px) and one set for mobile (640x240px). The office submitted PNG versions of the graphics that were 858KB and 209KB respectively... so far, so good. Those file sizes seemed to be a bit large to me though, so I ran them through Photoshop and resaved them as optimized JPG images (Photoshop > Export > Save for Web (Legacy) > JPG at 60% quality) and was able to get them down to 163KB and 50KB (respectively).

So... what's the big deal, right? 858KB and 209KB doesn't seem TOO terribly bad... most people have fast connections now, etc. right? (stay with me folks...)

Whereas it doesn't seem like much of a difference to an individual, it makes a HUGE difference to the aggregate.

So, crunching some numbers, here's the impact:

Over the past 30 days, the homepage of DHS.gov has had 3.54 million visitor sessions... 2.13 million on desktop and 1.21 million on mobile (roughly). For the sake of this argument, we're also assuming that since this slide is in the first slot on the DHS.gov homepage rotator, everyone visiting the site will load it. By optimizing the files, we were able to save 695 KB on the desktop version of the graphic and 159 KB on the mobile version of the graphic.

So we do the math:

- Desktop – 2,131,809 sessions - 695KB file differential = 1,481,607,255 KB (1.48 TB)
- Mobile – 1,209,894 sessions – 159KB file differential – 192,373,146 KB (192 GB)

So, by optimizing JUST these two files... we were able to save roughly 1.67 TB of data traffic... which is 1.67 TB of bandwidth we don't have to pay for... all because we took an extra 30 seconds to optimize both graphics. And if your site is fronted by a content delivery network (like Akamai for example) and you have graphics. And if your site is hosted by a content delivery network (like Akamai, for example) and you have the ability to dynamically compress images on delivery – even better.

Cool, huh? So next time someone gives you grief about prepping images properly and asks you “what the big deal” is, now you have an answer.

Sometimes it’s the little things in life...

I love these kind of stats. Thanks for sharing. I think with today's internet speeds and functionality, people tend to forget that optimization can still make a big difference. There are still some bafflingly huge offenders out there.

And it's a great example that I might use (if you don't mind) when I do my quarterly training for users of our CMS. Every kilobyte counts!

The State of Iowa uses GovDelivery from Granicus and have been pleased with the tool. We have about 600 administrators and over 400 publicly available topics going to over 1M. Their services have been outstanding for onboarding and ongoing support. They have helped individual agency program staff create templates and graphics and helped educate our users on how to improve engagement. Let me know if I can answer any other questions for you.

Hi Everyone,

We're nearing the end of our Email Subscription Tool and are researching some other options. We'd appreciate hearing what others in this group use at their Agencies? Along with that, do you require them to be FedRamp accredited, etc.

We'd welcome any opinions, why you like what you have now, why you hate it, what you wish you used, etc. Other info if you want to share also appreciated, i.e. cost, usage, customer service, config easy/difficult, etc.

While we are on the topic...

Don't forget to optimize your static files as well. So many PDFs are created and have lots of extras attached to them that are unneeded when sharing a final version with the public.

Heck, you should also optimize (and minify) your CSS and JS files both in size, but also quantity.

This is very interesting; and helpful. I'd actually forgotten about optimizing images as I migrated away from doing graphics. Now that it's becoming more prevalent to my duties, I'll be making this tweak as well. Thanks for this best practice tip!

Don't forget to optimize your static files as well. So many PDFs are created and have lots of extras attached to them that are unneeded when sharing a final version with the public.

Heck, you should also optimize (and minify) your CSS and JS files both in size, but also quantity.

I love these kind of stats. Thanks for sharing. I think with today's internet speeds and functionality, people tend to forget that optimization can still make a big difference. There are still some bafflingly huge offenders out there.

And it's a great example that I might use (if you don't mind) when I do my quarterly training for users of our CMS. Every kilobyte counts!

Subject: [Non-DoD Source] [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] Optimizing web graphics

Hi all -

Just ran across one of those things that we all talk about doing as a best practice but never really think about the REAL impact of... namely, the importance of optimizing web graphics.

We recently had an office prepare some graphics for the main homepage rotator on DHS.gov. For the rotator, we use two graphics - one set for desktop (1280x480px) and one set for mobile (640x240px). The office submitted PNG versions of the graphics that were 858KB and 209KB respectively... so far, so good. Those file sizes seemed to be a bit large to me though, so I ran them through Photoshop and resaved them as optimized JPG images (Photoshop > Export > Save for Web (Legacy) > JPG at 60% quality) and was able to get them down to 163KB and 50KB (respectively).

So... what's the big deal, right? 858KB and 209KB doesn't seem TOO terribly bad... most people have fast connections now, etc. right? (stay with me folks...)

Whereas it doesn't seem like much of a difference to an individual, it makes a HUGE difference to the aggregate.

So, crunching some numbers, here's the impact:

Over the past 30 days, the homepage of DHS.gov has had 3.54 million visitor sessions... 2.13 million on desktop and 1.21 million on mobile (roughly). For the sake of this argument, we're also assuming that since this slide is in the first slot on the DHS.gov homepage rotator, everyone visiting the site will load it. By optimizing the files, we were able to save 695 KB on the desktop version of the graphic and 159 KB on the mobile version of the graphic.

So we do the math:

- * Desktop - 2,131,809 sessions - 695KB file differential = 1,481,607,255 KB (1.48 TB)
- * Mobile - 1,209,894 sessions - 159KB file differential - 192,373,146 KB (192 GB)

So, by optimizing JUST these two files... we were able to save roughly 1.67 TB of data traffic... which is 1.67 TB of bandwidth we don't have to pay for... all because we took an extra 30 seconds to optimize both graphics. And if your site is fronted by a content delivery network (like Akamai, for example) and you have the ability to dynamically compress images on delivery - even better.

Cool, huh? So next time someone gives you grief about prepping images properly and asks you "what the big deal" is, now you have an answer.

This issue was the top argument against the visuals-heavy current look of DOI.gov. For a site-user in Indian Country (yes, that's the term -- and Indian Affairs is a pretty huge deal in my agency) -- likely with 2 or (at best) 3G service -- tons of high-res (👤) graphics are less than helpful. That's even with compression.

So, let's compress, folks. Then, on weekends, we can decompress, knowing that we served our communities as well as we could.

Good morning,

I'd love to hear from Federal agencies that have nailed down an optimal game plan for tracking media responses to their reports and content. We currently use Cision for this purpose. Our primary handicap is that we don't have the bandwidth to dedicate someone to media monitoring. We rely on the automated alerts we get, but we've been using Cision (and Vocus before that) for a while now and I would like to see if there are any better or cheaper alternatives out there. Since we started with Vocus, even simple options like Google alerts have come forward, but again, we will need a solution that doesn't require a lot of manual wrangling. Does anyone use "Meltwater"?

Note: There may be a Federal public relations list that I'm not part of that would be better suited for these questions. If so, let me know.

Any thoughts are much appreciated!

I made sure the folks over on the code.gov list got this info but seems useful here as well. We don't get a lot of training these days and without the Web Managers University event (which hasn't happened in years) there aren't many places or times when we get the chance to meet and talk to folks like us, webbies.

If you've never been to GovCon, I highly recommend it, and not just because I'm an organizer, it's because I get a lot out of the event, our sessions and the training. And it's all free.

So, submit a session. Here's how to do it:

Submit your session

DrupalGovCon features Drupal community leaders from around the world and sessions covering cutting-edge Drupal topics. If you have something to share with our community, we'd love for you to submit a session proposal!

The deadline for session submissions is Friday, May 10, 2019. We will notify speakers in early June if your session is selected.

Submit a session!

Don't forget to register!

Drupal GovCon prides itself on providing a wide range of session tracks for everyone on your team, no matter their role or level of experience. Registration for Drupal GovCon is free and includes a t-shirt and lunches on all three days.

Still figuring out configuration management in Drupal 8? Join Drupal4Gov in it's monthly webinar series as Mike Madison walks us through the basics!

May 16th, 2019 at 3pm EST: Register now!

<https://www.eventbrite.com/e/drupal4gov-webinar-series-configuration-workflow-in-drupal-8-registration-58188835373>

Configuration is a key concept in Drupal 8 that sits at the intersection of backend development, dependency management, theming, site building, and (in)sanity. Already the community has seen several significant shifts in the recommended "best practices" and with the announcement of a second configuration management initiative, there is no clear end in sight!

Still, those of us that work with Drupal 8 every day have to manage configuration, and we have to do it in a reusable and stable way.

This talk focuses on configuration management best practices as they stand today.

We'll focus on things like:

- Managing different configuration for different environments (config split)
- Ignoring configuration entirely (config ignore)
- Basic configuration workflow (including git, CI, testing, etc.)
- Interaction with DevOps (using tools like Acquia BLT)
- Dependency interactions with other config, modules, and composer
- Working with configuration in code

Who should attend:

- Site Builders
- Developers

About the speaker, Mike Madison

Mike Madison is an Acquia Certified Drupal Developer and a technical architect at Acquia. With over a decade of experience in web and background in HCI, he has used open source technologies such as Drupal (and Wordpress and Semantic MediaWiki) to solve challenging problems for a variety of clients and organizations around the world. He also contributes to a variety of Drupal community organizations and projects such a Drupal4Gov (which sponsors and puts on Drupal GovCon) where he is the technical lead and as a maintainer of the Conference Organizing Distribution (COD) and Acquia's Build and Launch Tools (BLT).

Morning all –

There seems to be a lot of confusion around the U.S. Web Design System and whether or not this constitutes the “Standards” referenced in the 21st Century IDEA Act.

To be clear, this are NOT the “standards” referenced in the 21st Century IDEA Act. They may (or may not) end up being part of the standards, but until OMB issues implementation guidance for the IDEA Act, we don’t know. That being said, OMB hasn’t issued the guidance yet, but rest assured that the Federal Web Managers Council is trying to stay as engaged as possible in the process, and we’ll share any and all information as soon as we can with this forum.

Subject: [COP-ALL-GOV] U.S. Web Design System 2.0 Is Here!

Good Afternoon,

My name is Jacob Parcell and my team coordinates a number of the Government-Wide Communities of Practice (COPs) at the U.S. General Services Administration. I wanted to share an announcement that will make government websites more user friendly. If you are not directly involved in the digital space, I hope you'll share this with a colleague who is.

Today GSA announced the release of the U.S. Web Design System version 2.0 (USWDS 2.0) -- a new foundation for the future of our design system.

See our USWDS 2.0 launch blog post (<https://go.usa.gov/xmCJc>) to check out everything the system has to offer.

Today's release makes a number of key improvements to the free and open-source design system already used by over 200 federal websites, and reaching over 550 million users annually. These improvements include:

- Applying mobile-friendly design concepts out of the box
- Deploying a color system to help simplify 508 compliance
- Implementing a new design token system, making the USWDS more flexible and adaptable to each agency's unique needs

If you're interested in learning more -- or want to be among the first to know when we release new content or announce new trainings and events around USWDS 2.0 -- sign up for the brand new USWDS 2.0 mailing list by emailing uswds-subscribe-request@listserv.gsa.gov

Other ways to connect with the USWDS:

- GitHub - <https://github.com/uswds/uswds/issues>
- Slack - <https://chat.18f.gov/>
- Twitter - <https://twitter.com/uswds?lang=en>
- Email Us - uswds@gsa.gov

Thank you all for your ongoing contributions to improving how the federal government leverages technology in the service of the American people.

Hi,
I'm looking for recommendations for a tool that provides usage statistics/metrics for an intranet site. We're using Urchin now but need a replacement. We have been told that Matomo and Anglefish are possible candidates, so would love to hear from anyone who has used them. We'd be grateful for any other suggestions as well.

Thank you!

Morning -

We use standard Google Analytics for the House intranet, with a bunch of custom-created reports/dashboards to make the KPIs more relevant to an internally-facing website. I haven't looked at other options, but GA has served us pretty well, even if it's normally meant for a public-facing website.

Hey Karen,

Always great to hear from Justice peeps 😊

Here at FDA, we use Google Analytics for our intranet metrics. We also use Angelfish for tracking downloads, among other things. Angelfish is much more limited in the data that you're able to track, and we've struggled with some performance issues.

Cheers,

We just switched our search page to use search.gov (we had had usasearch based on Bing but it wasn't updating new pages). Search results are terrible with obscure pages being returned at the top of the list for common search terms. The order of results is seemingly random. Many of our top level and most used pages don't show up or show up so far down the list they might as well not be there. Neither Google nor Bing do this. They return pages more or less in the order we believe are popular, with Google to my eye being slightly more accurate though both are fine. The search.gov does not return the main page with subtopics that Google does either.

Should we be using search.gov? Is there anything we can do to improve the results? Particularly we would like the most accessed pages to be listed on the first page near the top of the page.

Hello Cathy, and all,

Thank you for your feedback. Since your old Bing index was out of date and you needed the index updated fresh, it may take a while for the relevance to warm up. There are likely some SEO improvements we could suggest as well. Would you like to schedule some time to look at it together?

I am looking for any research or analysis that colleagues in the community have done on embedded social media feeds (such as their Twitter feed) on their websites. They often take up valuable real estate on home and landing pages and judging by own behavior, I am guessing, not many people interact with them. But I am willing to be convinced otherwise if there is good data.

Hopefully others have been thinking about it too and have done some exploration and analysis.

What does "relevance to warm up" mean, exactly? I think our pages are reasonably okay as far as SEO. It might depend on the specifics of what you use for SEO though (for example, google is always changing so we gave up keeping up with their page content suggestions). My main question is, can the list be ordered in terms of what people are using now? Does that happen but take a while as you just use count page links from the search.gov server? Can something else be used to order results until the site catches up?

We just switched our search page to use search.gov (we had had usasearch based on Bing but it wasn't updating new pages). Search results are terrible with obscure pages being returned at the top of the list for common search terms. The order of results is seemingly random. Many of our top level and most used pages don't show up or show up so far down the list they might as well not be there. Neither Google nor Bing do this. They return pages more or less in the order we believe are popular, with Google to my eye being slightly more accurate though both are fine. The search.gov does not return the main page with subtopics that Google does either.

Should we be using search.gov? Is there anything we can do to improve the results? Particularly we would like the most accessed pages to be listed on the first page near the top of the page.

Hi Cathy, we have several help docs that may be of interest, and I've included them below. A quick look at your site yielded several SEO findings which I'll follow up with you separately about, rather than discuss with 2000 people at once.

Generally speaking, though, there are signals that search engines need in order to target the right content and then leverage it for ranking.

We had a page for the social products and no one hit that page. Consistently ranked bottom, so I disabled it. We link social through our articles and social on social. Taking up real estate just didn't increase engagement.

When we first began using Drupal about 10 years ago, we had a block to display the last few tweets on our homepage. We took it down after six months because nobody clicked on them.

We still have the AddThis module active, but probably disable it as it gets no use.
We also use Tagboard to embed images from Instagram and other platforms on specific pages.

We do have links in our footer to our various social media platforms, just to let people know we have a presence there, but we don't need Twitter/Facebook/Pinterest/Instagram content on our pages.

Good discussion.

One other thing to consider is that those feeds can really drag your page load speed down. It's worth testing if you are going to use them, especially if other development techniques are not in place like compressed images and minified JS/CSS.

Thanks.

We are very happy with search.gov on our site (sec.gov). We had been using DigitalGov search services for many years, paired with Google's Site Search (GSS) to provide background indexing. When Google announced in 2017 they were shutting down GSS in April 2018, we worked with the search.gov team to transition to their in-house Elastic Search solution. They were moving away from Bing at the same time, so it was a major effort on their part.

Based on their guidance, we gave them site maps in advance and worked out a going-forward solution for indexing using their i14y API service. We continue to refresh our site maps monthly. We make use of their Best Bets service and use collections for filters. Searches do return relevant results.

The search.gov team has been responsive to our questions and concerns. They continue to improve the service, including just recently adding a "sitelimit" parameter through a url string query to filter results based on url path (mimics Google's "site:" operator). They are hinting at allowing more Boolean operators in query strings in the near future.

Search.gov is a great choice for federal websites.

Hello!

The subject of logos has come up again around my shop. I find myself recalling reading about how the U.S. Mint created its "coins" logo and all the usage guidance around it.

Naturally, I can't find it.

Anyone remember this? Got a copy?

Hello!

The subject of logos has come up again around my shop. I find myself recalling reading about how the U.S. Mint created its "coins" logo and all the usage guidance around it.

Naturally, I can't find it.

Anyone remember this? Got a copy?

If it helps, I'm pretty sure the firm was Siegel + Gale—I spoke with them for our redesign and they mentioned having worked with U.S. Mint.

I will see if I can dig this up. I worked at the Mint at that time – I do know that we spent A LOT of time and $$$ paying an outside consultant to come up with that new logo and branding....

Thanks for sharing.

"codify customer experience" - Interesting.

Years ago, I was corrected when I assumed that Marketing and Sales were the same, ie. customer experience "before the purchase" and "after the purchase".

In terms of the VA and the administrative state, when is this customer experience taking place - before or after?

From my working class viewpoint, this looks like "after the purchase", have not our veterans already paid?

Happy Monday,

Hi all,
My team's php/Drupal development team is using composer, the php package management system. With composer, developers can be sure that all third-party libraries and dependencies are installed correctly.

The official php package repository is at packagist.org, but we need another solution for private packages.

Are any of your php development teams using private composer solutions? If so, could you share what you are using and any feedback you might have on it, such as how it integrates into your software build/deployment process? Our cyber team has rejected using the locally hosted Packagist server, so we are looking for alternatives.

Thanks,

Hi Shauna,

Have you considered defining a custom vcs repository (I assume you are storing the code for a package in Git, Subversion or some other version control system) in your composer.json?

<https://getcomposer.org/doc/05-repositories.md#vcs>

Another option is the package repository. When the chosen JS library wasn't yet available on Packagist we used the following to define a repository in our composer.json and then included it with a typical require line.

"require": {
    "harvesthq/chosen": "^1.8"

"repositories": [
        "type": "package",
        "package": {
            "name": "harvesthq/chosen",
            "version": "1.8.2",
            "type": "drupal-library",
            "dist": {
                "url": "https://github.com/harvesthq/chosen/releases/download/v1.8.2/chosen_v1.8.2.zip",
                "type": "zip"
            "require": {
                "composer/installers": "^1.2.0"

This Medium post talks about the to options above and some others <https://medium.com/packagist/custom-package-definitions-3f433629861e>

Greetings all,

The Federal Trade Commission, one of the best places to work in the federal government, seeks a passionate digital communicator and technologist to join the Web and Digital Strategy Team in the Office of Public Affairs.

You have a unique opportunity to influence the FTC's digital outreach. You'll use your web and Drupal expertise, metrics savvy, analytical skills, and creativity to help us develop new approaches to reaching and engaging our audiences with digital outreach, and you'll manage our flagship website, FTC.gov.

Digital Communications Technologies Specialist (IT Specialist, GS-13). Position closes 6/14/19.

At the FTC you can have a direct, positive impact on people's lives. Our mission is to enforce a variety of federal antitrust and consumer protection laws. Our staff prosecute scammers, go after robocallers, send refund checks to consumers who lose money to fraud schemes, help consumers recover from identity theft, and take action against companies that violate antitrust laws.

In 2018 the FTC was ranked the best place to work among 27 mid-size federal government agencies by the Partnership for Public Service. We also ranked number one in effective leadership, strategic management, innovation, performance-based awards/advancement and employee skills mission-match.

Hi Folks (please pardon the cross-post),

We're doing another copyright-related Creative Comms session tomorrow. This time, we're focusing on Creative Commons.

Just to be super-clear: There is no registration for watching the Livestream. If you'd like to attend live, you need to let me know -- and be ready to pass through the usual airport-style screening process (so send me your name, etc., by 3pm today, so I can alert security).

That's it!

Larry
----- Forwarded message -----

Hello Creative Communicators!

Quick reminder time: We've got a CCSeminar this week. Subject: Creative Commons

This one's a big deal. Creative Commons is both crystal clear and clearly nuanced. As with so many things, paying attention and getting it right are super-important. And I can tell you this: Feds get Creative Commons wrong -- a lot -- and we should get it right -- a lot!

This class should help.

Did I mention that it's a big deal?

When: Tuesday, June 4, 2 pm EDT (DC time)

Level: Beginner

Webcast: DOI.gov/events

Live & in-person: Udall/MIB, Rachel Carson Room (downstairs, just off the Bison Bistro)

Registration for DOI staff: None for the webcast -- but I wouldn't mind an email, letting me know that you'll attend in-person.

Registration for non-DOI feds: None for the webcast -- but I need an email by 3pm today, so I can alert security -- and figure out if I can fit you in.

Presenter: Meredith Jacob

Meredith is the Public Lead for Creative Commons USA. She manages the day-to-day operations of the organization and maintains the core legal guidance around Creative Commons licenses. Meredith is currently working with libraries and archivists on a project to define best practices in fair use specific to those communities. Additionally, Meredith serves as the Assistant Director for Academic Programs at the Program on Information Justice and Intellectual Property at American University's Washington College of Law, where her work includes research and advocacy on open access to federally funded research, flexible limitations and exceptions to copyright, and the public interest in intellectual property law.

TLDR: Meredith knows this stuff. We will, too.

See you next week!

Hello Web Content Manager Community Members!

The Federal Crowdsourcing Webinar Series is picking up steam as we move closer to summer!

Registration is now open for Episode 3, a look at how the U.S. Census Bureau's crowdsourcing efforts are turning open data into economic opportunity.

This episode will include:

- an overview of the project's accomplishments to date,
- a primer on how different organizations and people can get involved,
- information on how it serves the broader crowdsourcing mission at Census Open Innovation Labs, and
- a preview of The Opportunity Project's first-ever prize competition to encourage product adoption and sustainability.

The Opportunity Project is a collaborative effort between government agencies, tech companies and non-government organizations to translate open data into user-friendly tools that solve problems faced by families, communities and businesses throughout the country.

The Opportunity Project has produced 80 digital tools that help families, schools, local officials and other members of the public. These tools are rebuilding rural communities, connecting veterans with jobs, and providing access to services and shelter for the homeless, among other things.

Thanks!

Importance: High

Please share this OPM detail opportunity with your networks.

This opportunity will expose the candidate to the full range of Executive Resources (ER) operations and support to all executive branch and independent agencies, from the vantage point of a government-wide information technology system. This experience also focuses on information technology management in a human capital function. The candidate will have the opportunity to plan, organize, and oversee work in dashboard and report design.

If you enjoy leading the design of dashboards and have an interest in the inner workings of how the Senior Executive Service (SES) across federal agencies is supported, then look into this OPM Detail opportunity! Please contact Tommy Hwang at tommy.hwang@opm.gov by 6/30/2019, but interested candidates will be reviewed on a first come, first-served basis.

U.S. Office of Personnel Management Non-Reimbursable Detail Special Opportunity Notice

120-Day Detail to Employee Services Senior Executive Services and Performance Management

Employee Services, Senior Executive Services & Performance Management (SESPM) is recruiting for two full-time detailees who are trained and skilled in building reports using a web-based, business reporting tool. As a Detailee you will gain exposure to the daily operations of the Senior Executive Resources Services (SERS) Group of SESPM. The detail will be for eight hours per day for up to 120 days. The OPM Director needs to provide final approval after a detailee has been selected.

ABOUT THE JOB:

SERS is a high tempo Group that provides Government-wide leadership, guidance, operational and technical support for a full range of executive programs and operations. SERS also is responsible for the IT system (Executive and Schedule C System (ESCS)) used across the Federal Government in support of their operational needs.

Under the general supervision of the Senior Executive Resources Services Group Manager, the detailee will work with seasoned SERS team members in building reports using InfoAssist, the web-based ad hoc reporting tool in WebFOCUS.

The length of the Detail is 120-days as agreed upon by both organizations with the possibility of extension. The location of the Detail is at the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) in Washington, DC.

REQUIREMENTS:

- A background in IT, with some knowledge of relational data structures and building reports using a business user reporting tool.
- Ability to quickly learn business functions and their associated business data entities and relationships.
- Ability to analyze business needs and develop dashboard and report requirements.
- Ability to use a tool like WebFOCUS InfoAssist to build and maintain end-user reports.
- Ability to respond to ad-hoc and Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests.
- Ability to concisely communicate, understand and interpret information.
- Ability to work independently after initial instruction has been provided.
- Ability to analyze and use critical thinking to problem solve and take appropriate actions.
- Excellent oral and written communication skills.
- Ability to be innovative and flexible in helping management officials meet their strategic goals and objectives for the office.

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED:

- Specific experience with WebFOCUS or other similar Business Intelligence tools.
- Diligent and detail-oriented.

GRADE LEVEL:

The Detail will be to a list of duties.

HOW TO APPLY:

Submit resumes to Tommy Hwang, via email at tommy.hwang@opm.gov. The deadline to submit resumes is June 30, 2019, but interested candidates will be reviewed on a first-come, first served basis.

We in the Dept of IT at the State of North Carolina use Optimal Workshop for online card sorts and tree tests, and find it easy to use and enormously helpful.

You can share the results with a private link to the client, but we like to create a report as well. The one frustration I have is that the gorgeous online reports are not downloadable. So something like the attached can only be captured with screenshots.

That said, I'd still purchase again.

Hope that helps,

Content Managers,

The Federal Reserve Board's Currency Education Program (CEP) would like your help with improving the CEP's website www.uscurrency.gov. We are asking volunteers from the public to take a short online survey about their interests regarding currency history and online history content. The survey takes about 17 minutes to complete. No previous experience with the CEP website is necessary.

If you are interested in volunteering to take the online usability activity survey, please email us at uscurrency@frb.gov to obtain the link.

Unfortunately, I don't have a specific answer for you, Christine. But the general answer from the main Smithsonian site is: webmaster@si.edu . I bet whoever reads those can get you to the right person.

Also, for everyone's consideration, I have a relevant story.

Years ago, we put a box on the EPA home page asking people to suggest one thing they'd like us to do to improve the website. Putting contact info on every page crushed everything else, winning by a 2:1 margin over the 2nd place idea (I don't even remember what that was).

That's why I highly recommend putting that link at the top and bottom of every page. Click maps show that some people look at the top and others look at the bottom.

Hello Web Content Managers COP,

Register here to learn how to help determine if your agency is using a tone of voice that connects with customers online, or if it is using a stale, bureaucratic voice that repels them and breeds distrust or confusion.

Noted trainer Leslie O’Flahavan will cover what brand voice is and how it’s governed. We’ll see examples of agency content that’s written in a voice that supports the agency’s brand, and some examples that don’t. We’ll go through a simple exercise that will help you define your brand voice, which may vary somewhat by project, product, or section of your site. We’ll also discuss the situations in which using an inconsistent voice will cause problems.

Good morning:

The CFTC began a series of podcasts (CFTC Talks) in August 2017 to cover financial topics and areas impacting markets that are regulated. In preparing these podcasts for public use, the CFTC had also provided a transcript of the auditory discussion. We would like to re-new and extend the series -- so, the podcasts will become webcasts to include video, slides, and other visual aids.

What is the requirement for providing transcription of PPT slides to meet 508 accessibility requirements? Is there any guidance I can direct/share with our A/V staff to reference in their future production?

Thanks in advance!

Hi, LaSharn,

- The CFTC began a series of podcasts (CFTC Talks) in August 2017 to cover financial topics and areas impacting markets that are regulated. In preparing these podcasts for public use, the CFTC had also provided a transcript of the auditory discussion. We would like to re-new and extend the series -- so, the podcasts will become webcasts to include video, slides, and other visual aids.
- What is the requirement for providing transcription of PPT slides to meet 508 accessibility requirements? Is there any guidance I can direct/share with our A/V staff to reference in their future production?

It sounds like you're now turning the audio files/podcasts into full videos or multimedia. In that case, you're now looking at both audio-descriptions (<https://www.hhs.gov/web/section-508/making-files-accessible/hhs-guidance-audio-description.html>) and synchronized captioning. One of the most comprehensive, plain language, government pieces of writing on the subject I've seen to date is an SOP from Interior. A good balance of technical information and plain language:

- U.S. Department of the Interior Office of the Secretary Office of the Chief Information Officer Standard Operating Procedures For Creating Accessible Audio/Visual Media
- https://www.doi.gov/sites/doi.gov/files/uploads/sops_for_creating_accessible_audio_visual_med

If you're posting the PowerPoint (or any other) files, as downloadable, they'll of course also need to be remediated for accessibility and Section 508 standards.

Audio-Description Audio description is a verbal depiction of a visual event for persons with visual impairments. In short, it is 'the art of talking pictorially'. Audio-description is an oral description of a program's key visual elements that is inserted during natural pauses in program dialogue. Audio-Descriptions should not be confused with captioning. Captioning is for Deaf and hard-of-hearing persons; AD is a descriptive voice-over of the visual information for persons who are blind or visually impaired. It generally describes actions that are not otherwise reflected in the dialogue, such as the movement of a person in a scene. Video description involves the insertion into a TV program of narrated descriptions of settings and actions that are not otherwise reflected in the dialogue, such as the movement of a person in the scene. AD is best provided when planned for during the storyboarding and development stages of production, before filming even starts. (See ACB for further information: <https://www.acb.org/audio-description-project> and <http://www.acb.org/adp/>).

Guidance I recently sent to someone here at the NIH, on Audio-Description:

Two versions of a video is the typical way to handle ensuring the provision of Audio-Descriptions, since there are very few media players that do provide for closed Audio-Descriptions, where an end-user can turn it on/off at their pleasure.

Depending on the video, if you write expanded narration from the start, it can work to produce one video that is more 'universal access' rather than 'Section 508 conformant' and is a great way to go about it.

HHS instructions:

- Audio/Video \(AV\) 508 Checklist, which speaks not only to captioning but also to multimedia accessibility for persons who are blind and sight impaired, HHS Guidance for Audio Description (AD) (<https://www.hhs.gov/web/section-508/making-files-accessible/hhs-guidance-audio-description.html>)

The Dept. of Interior has developed great guidance, <https://www.doi.gov/employees/drupal/audio-description> (particularly at Harpers Ferry Center of NPS).

Audio description (AD) is narration that has been added to a video to make visual content accessible to individuals who are blind or have other visual disabilities. AD is required by law, and beyond that, it is just the right thing to do!

Good stuff – Thanks, Gary!

We frequently get questions re: PPT accessibility when preparing to share with the public, and as a result – many staff decide to veer away from doing the PPT, and steer toward providing text only/PDF alternatives. This will be interesting to see if the preference will change, once we begin incorporating PPTs into the webcasts. This will be very helpful for our CFTC A/V staff.

Again – very much appreciated!

We're looking for solutions to consider specific to collecting emails processed for FOIA requests so that we build a depository of the collected emails in a way that subsequent searches could be conducted to quickly identify those emails already disclosed that are also responsive to a new FOIA request and could be immediately provided to that requester. Ideally, we would have multiple groupings – (1) the PDF versions of what was disclosed to the requester, (2) the internal copies of the PDFs with confidential content marked to be redacted, and (3) the native files – MSG for individual emails or PST for groups of emails. The result being that we could do searches in any of those 3 groupings.

Good question!

First, my 508 coordinator doesn't appreciate their control scheme. Keyboarding is "meh" and audio description is nonexistent. But I'm not going to lay this all on him.

Second (this is my part), IMHO it's none of Google's business if someone wants to watch government videos about (for example) VA benefits, homelessness and pregnancy -- and I'm not having any part in them putting all those views together in a profile of one of our citizen-customers. I do allow linking to YouTube as a backup system. I'm not a complete Luddite. Now, let me put on my straw hat and take my horse and buggy home for the weekend. ;-)

It sounds like you're now turning the audio files/podcasts into full videos or multimedia. In that case, you're now looking at both audio-descriptions (<https://www.hhs.gov/web/section-508/making-files-accessible/hhs-guidance-audio-description.html>) and synchronized captioning. One of the most comprehensive, plain language, government pieces of writing on the subject I've seen to date is an SOP from Interior. A good balance of technical information and plain language:

- U.S. Department of the Interior Office of the Secretary Office of the Chief Information Officer Standard Operating Procedures For Creating Accessible Audio/Visual Media
- https://www.doi.gov/sites/doi.gov/files/uploads/sops_for_creating_accessible_audio_visual_media_2

If you're posting the PowerPoint (or any other) files, as downloadable, they'll of course also need to be remediated for accessibility and Section 508 standards.

Audio-Description Audio description is a verbal depiction of a visual event for persons with visual impairments. In short, it is ‘the art of talking pictorially’. Audio-description is an oral description of a program's key visual elements that is inserted during natural pauses in program dialogue. Audio-Descriptions should not be confused with captioning. Captioning is for Deaf and hard-of-hearing persons; AD is a descriptive voice-over of the visual information for persons who are blind or visually impaired. It generally describes actions that are not otherwise reflected in the dialogue, such as the movement of a person in a scene. Video description involves the insertion into a TV program of narrated descriptions of settings and actions that are not otherwise reflected in the dialogue, such as the movement of a person in the scene. AD is best provided when planned for during the storyboarding and development stages of production, before filming even starts. (See ACB for further information: <https://www.acb.org/audio-description-project> and <http://www.acb.org/adp/>).

Guidance I recently sent to someone here at the NIH, on Audio-Description:

Two versions of a video is the typical way to handle ensuring the provision of Audio-Descriptions, since there are very few media players that do provide for closed Audio-Descriptions, where an end-user can turn it on/off at their pleasure.

Depending on the video, if you write expanded narration from the start, it can work to produce one video that is more ‘universal access’ rather than ‘Section 508 conformant’ and is a great way to go about it.

HHS instructions:

- Audio/Video \(AV\) 508 Checklist, which speaks not only to captioning but also to multimedia accessibility for persons who are blind and sight impaired, HHS Guidance for Audio Description (AD) (<https://www.hhs.gov/web/section-508/making-files-accessible/hhs-guidance-audio-description.html>)

The Dept. of Interior has developed great guidance, <https://www.doi.gov/employees/drupal/audio-description> (particularly at Harpers Ferry Center of NPS).

Audio description (AD) is narration that has been added to a video to make visual content accessible to individuals who are blind or have other visual disabilities. AD is required by law, and beyond that, it is just the right thing to do!

We're looking for solutions to consider specific to collecting emails processed for FOIA requests so that we build a depository of the collected emails in a way that subsequent searches could be conducted to quickly identify those emails already disclosed that are also responsive to a new FOIA request and could be immediately provided to that requester. Ideally, we would have multiple groupings – (1) the PDF versions of what was disclosed to the requester, (2) the internal copies of the PDFs with confidential content marked to be redacted, and (3) the native files – MSG for individual emails or PST for groups of emails. The result being that we could do searches in any of those 3 groupings.

Hi! Has anyone's agency/department approved any polling software you're using (mainly internally – with staff)? I'm finding our agency has not approved any (cloud based mainly – doodle/poll everywhere are not approved, and we haven't even tried to ask for slido which is our current interest). Curious to know if any agencies are approving them and if so, which ones? We do use surveymonkey but are looking for something more robust/targeted.

(I recognize FedRAMP hasn't approved much either...but again...crowdsourcing 😊)

Thanks all!

Qualtrics is an incredibly robust survey software that allows for quite a bit of customization. They are also FEDRamp-approved. However, they do not have an actual polling feature; where the aggregate distribution of results is presented to users upon submission. So, in that sense, it's more of a traditional survey software.

In any case, aside from lack of a standalone "polling" feature, you still may want to look into Qualtrics. The software allows users to customize logos, CSS, and intercept rules, allowing for micro-targeting; has a relatively large library of implementation options, including for mobile devices; and, includes advanced features for statistical analysis, text-mining, and dynamic dashboards.

Thanks.

We went live today with the schedule (which will be sent to our mailchimp list tomorrow), but thought I'd tell you today because I noticed a couple of our trainings have already sold out, are on a waitlist or are close to selling out. Surprise!

<https://www.drupalgovcon.org/full-and-half-day-training>

You can also flag a session to create a schedule for yourself, too! I know, we're pretty snazzy.

<https://www.drupalgovcon.org/2019/schedule/07/24>

Drupal GovCon is a completely volunteer run event. It's FREE to attend and it is OPEN to the PUBLIC. Should be pretty easy for you all to attend and get approval to attend. Hope to see lots of you at NIH July 23-26th!

Hi, Web Managers!

As you've no doubt heard, the 21st Century Integrated Digital Experience Act \(21st Century IDEA\) became law last December. In this law are several action items for federal web managers, including website modernization, digitization of services and forms, customer experience and digital service delivery, and standardization.

Many agencies have already begun to address the action items outlined in this law, but there are some things that require scoping and clarification from OMB. To help identify these issues, the Federal Web Council has established an IdeaScale community to collect feedback and comments from agencies (you).

Please visit <https://21stcenturyidea.ideascale.com> between now and COB Thursday, June 27, to pose questions and vote on your top issues. Please note that, if you don't already have an IdeaScale account, you will need to register for one. We also are limiting "automatic" registration in the community to those with a .gov or .mil email address... others can register, but will need to be approved.

The Federal Web Council will then use this information to make recommendations to OMB.

Thanks!

Subject: [CONTENT-MANAGERS-L] FOIA Email Requests

Request from one of the people in my office for advice...
 Thanks,
 -C

We're looking for solutions to consider specific to collecting emails processed for FOIA requests so that we build a depository of the collected emails in a way that subsequent searches could be conducted to quickly identify those emails already disclosed that are also responsive to a new FOIA request and could be immediately provided to that requester. Ideally, we would have multiple groupings – (1) the PDF versions of what was disclosed to the requester, (2) the internal copies of the PDFs with confidential content marked to be redacted, and (3) the native files – MSG for individual emails or PST for groups of emails. The result being that we could do searches in any of those 3 groupings.

Good Morning, Content Managers Community!

In honor of GSA's 70th Anniversary and on behalf of the Office of Products and Programs, the Presidential Innovation Fellows (PIF) program, and DigitalGov University, we would like to invite you to join us next Tuesday, June 25, for the first in a series of 15-minute chats that we are calling the American Tech Series. This series is meant to foster learnings and a collective voice on applied innovation.

What: American Tech Series, Part One: Why Leave the Private Sector?

Civic technologists bring new technologies into our government in service of the American people. Their job is about managing the process of technology change, and introducing the art of the possible to government leaders. Our guests will share about what led them to leave the private sector to become civic technologists.

When: Tuesday, June 25 from 2:00 to 2:15 pm ET

Where: Digital.gov & YouTube Live. Register here!

Who: Hosted by PIF leaders Joshua Di Frances and Davar Ardalan, and featuring Director of Workforce Solutions at Centers of Excellence (CoE), Nina Bianchi and PIF Clarice Chan who is now working with the Veterans Affairs Chief Technology Officer.

Hello friends —

Today we are delighted to announce the launch of a new Digital.gov guide to navigating the Paperwork Reduction Act (PRA) at <https://pra.digital.gov/> !

The PRA Guide is a plain language guide which answers the most common questions, like “What is the PRA for?”, “Do I need clearance?”, and “What’s the process?”

It aims to give federal employees confidence working with the PRA and through this lower the barriers to working effectively with the public.

All of the content has been reviewed and approved by OIRA, so you can trust what you read.

We will be continuing to develop the site over the coming months, so if you have suggestions to make it even better, please let us know!

Read the blog post on Digital.gov (<https://digital.gov/2019/06/18/introducing-a-guide-paperwork-reduction-act/>).

Blockchain community:

These 2 positions close tomorrow and are open to current federal employees, veterans and other specific groups. I know this is late notice, but wanted to do one final push to get the word out in the federal technology community. 😊

Assistant Director, Innovation (SK-17)

<https://www.usajobs.gov/GetJob/ViewDetails/535845400>

Branch Chief, Solutions Engineering (SK-15)

<https://www.usajobs.gov/GetJob/ViewDetails/535845100>

These positions are both part of OIT's new Strategy and Innovation group, created in February 2019. We're working to bring new thinking and ways of working to our technical planning and development process. The S&I team of nearly 30 staff includes Enterprise Architecture, Governance, the Data and Cloud Programs, and Enterprise Platforms.

The Innovation group supports OIT's intake of new technology requests, requirements development, and technical planning. We're moving towards prototyping and agile development as key parts of the technology planning process, and the Solutions Engineering team will develop and deliver functional prototypes for top priority technology needs.

Cheers!

Part of our Drupal4Gov monthly webinar series on the Third Thursday at Three, every month.

Today's series is all about

<https://www.eventbrite.com/e/drupal4gov-webinar-series-optimizing-and-reducing-web-development-timelines-through-component-reuse-registration-60868872436>

The web is hard, it's why we hire people with dedicated skills to help manage it in government and everywhere else.

But did you know that the web has evolved to a place where it's actually about to get easier? Seriously. How is this possible?

In this webinar, Bryan Ollendyke of Penn State will talk about web components. Components that can and are making the web systemically easier, cheaper to produce, more accessible, and gasp sustainable. The web component specification is a new way your team can build and leverage each other's work across government agencies. Hear why Penn State, Google, BYU, Comcast, Red Hat, and others have adopted web components and how you can align it with your existing design system work to deliver projects faster and with greater accountability.

If you like what you hear and you're coming out for Drupal GovCon you can meet Bryan on July 23rd during training day at NIH <https://www.drupalgovcon.org/full-and-half-day-training>

Several of our trainings are now closed, but Bryan's is open and is in a large room so you can definitely come on out for some hands on web component training on July 23rd.

I'm currently using devdesktop but hoping to move to DDEV or DVM soon as devdesktop has sometimes been problematic (upgrades killed theme files, sometimes devdesktop doesn't sync with acquia cloud and some other issues or bugs I've found).

Have you looked at the other ones first? And if you're still set on Acquia, honestly, suggest the change, they're pretty accommodating where they can be.

The CXO Fellowship is accepting applications for the next cohort (FY20) at <https://cfo.gov/cxo-fellows/>. The deadline is Friday, August 9 by 5:00 PM.

About the Program

The CXO Fellowship is an initiative of the Executive Councils to increase inter-agency and cross functional collaboration (<https://cfo.gov/cxo-fellows/>). For FY 2019, the program has 100 Fellows representing four functions: IT, finance, acquisition and human capital. Throughout the year, the program offers a variety of educational seminars in professional development, inside the government experiences, and leadership speaker series. Our mission is to increase cross functional collaboration in the Federal government in a inter agency environment. The Fellows meet twice a month for all day professional development sessions throughout the DC area.

- Must be stationed in the Washington, DC area.
- Must be working within the acquisition/procurement, information technology, financial management/budgeting and human capital functions.
- Must be in the grades of GS09 - GS13.
- Must be nominated by their supervisor, and approved by the department Chief Executive Officer of the respective function (CAO, CIO, CFO, CHCO).

Application:

Apply online. Applications must be submitted no later than August 9, 2019, 5:00 PM and contain your contact information, supervisor's approval, and two short essay responses.

Hello All,
 I was wondering if anyone could offer pros and cons of press releases as PDF compared to aspx pages..
 We built <http://www.marylandattorneygeneral.gov/> with Sharepoint a few years ago. At that time, we opted to create press releases in PDF and store them in document libraries so we could display and search easily with webparts. We are finding difficulties in social sharing with the PDFs. It seems to me that most gov sites use web pages instead of PDFs for press releases. Thoughts?

Thanks!

Hi Fritz,

Forgive me, but I'm going to quote my own guide (<https://www.doi.gov/employees/drupal/pdfs>):

PDFs

Background

First, it's probably a good idea to have read our guidance on Brand Name Requirements, prior to reading this.

Also, recall that PDFs are fairly awful on mobile devices.

So, if your content can be web pages instead of PDFs, go with web pages. If it seems that we're biased against PDFs, it's just because the user experience with PDFs is clearly not as good as the user experience with web pages.

508 compliance

Now, let's mention the obvious: All PDFs on Interior sites must be 508 compliant/accessible; so if you must use a PDF, don't foul-up accessibility.

Do not load a non-compliant PDF on DOI.gov. Do not load a non-compliant PDF on /elips. For clarity's sake, understand that this is a very public declaration that you're not allowed to add non-compliant PDFs to DOI.gov. Just don't do it.

Particular "reader" technology

Less obvious: Don't use PDF formats that require particular technology solutions for their use. In other words, if we post a PDF that requires the use of Internet Explorer, we're wrong. A PDF that requires a Mac? Also wrong. A PDF that requires a Windows PC? Still wrong. A PDF that requires particular reader software? Only acceptable if it absolutely, positively can't be helped -- and it usually can be.

If your PDF can't be opened on a mobile device, not only are you wrong, you're making our website look dated. As I've written before, I don't mind age (I'm going to pretend that my own grey is "distinguished"), but I do mind our websites behaving like they're from the '90s or early 2000s.

BTW, if your PDFs require particular technology solutions for their use, what are the odds that they're 508 compliant? Not very good odds. 'Nuff said.

Birds of a feather

Addendum: In case you're wondering if we're alone in trying to avoid the use of PDFs (especially bad PDFs), we're not. The UK's Government Digital Service clearly has similar thoughts and policies. Don't let me speak for them, read their blog post, "Why GOV.UK content should be published in HTML and not PDF." It's a good read.

Great question!

1. We hadn't considered DVM yet. To install it, we'd either need to have Windows Subsystem Linux (WSL) enabled and that battle is likely more uphill than just installing devdesktop. While there are other options for non-WSL—Cygwin and Cmder—they likely entail more ToS and security red tape. Powershell seems to be possible, so we could explore that. Additionally, our shop uses Docker so if we have WSL, we might as well install Docker and have the windows machine fall in line with the rest of our ecosystem.
2. DDEV has the same type of dependency as it runs on Docker. It does work using Hyper-V in addition to WSL, though that has same obstacles.

The other thing to consider is the need to have a fairly straightforward interface for the user to work with. While some folks are fine running everything in command line, the Windows user is not going to be as comfortable doing that.

All that being said, if there's a simpler way to run a Drupal site on a Windows machine with no additional Windows feature enabling, I'm all ears!

I'm currently using devdesktop but hoping to move to DDEV or DVM soon as devdesktop has sometimes been problematic (upgrades killed theme files, sometimes devdesktop doesn't sync with acquia cloud and some other issues or bugs I've found).

Have you looked at the other ones first? And if you're still set on Acquia, honestly, suggest the change, they're pretty accommodating where they can be.

Hmm, windows, as a Mac user and a fan of drush and command line tools, I prefer not windows. Sorry I can't be of help on that. Might be a good BoF to have at Drupal GovCon in July. Actually talk about best practices for running a local with drupal on windows. Perhaps a group of you might find a solution together.

Me too!!! I do personal/learning dev on my Mac with both Acquia Dev Desktop and Drupal VM. I too am having issues finding the right local development environment for my Windows 10 GFE.

- I can get ADD installed, but I'm also told that to run it requires admin rights/elevated privileges for it to run. This appears to be the most acceptable option and I'm waiting for the approvals now.
- I would prefer to try ddev, but haven't secured the ok for Docker... would like to use Drupal VM, but would need to get permission to run Virtual Box... all of which appear to be bigger hurdles than ADD.

There was a really good session at DrupalCon Seattle this year – the results of the 2019 Developer Tool Survey Results were discussed as well as the pros/cons of each tool. It was really interesting! You can watch the recording and get the slides at: <https://events.drupal.org/seattle2019/sessions/what-should-i-use-2019-developer-tool-survey-results>

I still don't have anything on my Win10 GFE yet, but I'm eager to hear other success stories!

Great question!

1. We hadn't considered DVM yet. To install it, we'd either need to have Windows Subsystem Linux (WSL) enabled and that battle is likely more uphill than just installing devdesktop. While there are other options for non-WSL—Cygwin and Cmder—they likely entail more ToS and security red tape. Powershell seems to be possible, so we could explore that. Additionally, our shop uses Docker so if we have WSL, we might as well install Docker and have the windows machine fall in line with the rest of our ecosystem.
2. DDEV has the same type of dependency as it runs on Docker. It does work using Hyper-V in addition to WSL, though that has same obstacles.

The other thing to consider is the need to have a fairly straightforward interface for the user to work with. While some folks are fine running everything in command line, the Windows user is not going to be as comfortable doing that.

I'm currently using devdesktop but hoping to move to DDEV or DVM soon as devdesktop has sometimes been problematic (upgrades killed theme files, sometimes devdesktop doesn't sync with acquia cloud and some other issues or bugs I've found).

Have you looked at the other ones first? And if you're still set on Acquia, honestly, suggest the change, they're pretty accommodating where they can be.

Hello fellow Content Managers,

We've recently found a need for using Acquia Dev Desktop for a couple users within Commerce. Naturally, the question about Terms of Service came up, and the software isn't listed on Digital.gov's negotiated ToS Agreements.

Before we go down the rabbit hole of working out our own ToS for this software. Have any other agencies out there done this? Can you share what you might have?

Yes, we'll have the BoF board up and read for folks on Wednesday morning. BoF room will be available starting after lunch on July 24th and run through to the end of the event on Friday at 2.

I know there's a plan to have a BoF on advanced CSS and I'll be hosting a Coffee Exchange on Thursday morning 9am BoF. I think these are the only ones currently being talked about. Although, I'd love to see one on Docker and Kubernetes, but that's cause I want to go, not lead or contribute. I just think it's fascinating and I so want to dive in.

Wow, didn't know so many others were struggling through this as well! I will be sure to add this BoF to this year's Drupal GovCon as soon as we can schedule (which sounds like it has to be day-of).

Proposed topic title/purpose would be: Setting up a local Drupal development environment for Windows GFE. Thoughts?

Me too!!! I do personal/learning dev on my Mac with both Acquia Dev Desktop and Drupal VM. I too am having issues finding the right local development environment for my Windows 10 GFE.

- I can get ADD installed, but I'm also told that to run it requires admin rights/elevated privileges for it to run. This appears to be the most acceptable option and I'm waiting for the approvals now.
- I would prefer to try ddev, but haven't secured the ok for Docker... would like to use Drupal VM, but would need to get permission to run Virtual Box... all of which appear to be bigger hurdles than ADD.

There was a really good session at DrupalCon Seattle this year – the results of the 2019 Developer Tool Survey Results were discussed as well as the pros/cons of each tool. It was really interesting! You can watch the recording and get the slides at: <https://events.drupal.org/seattle2019/sessions/what-should-i-use-2019-developer-tool-survey-results>

I still don't have anything on my Win10 GFE yet, but I'm eager to hear other success stories!

Actually talk about best practices for running a local with drupal on windows. Perhaps a group of you might find a solution together.

Great question!

1. We hadn't considered DVM yet. To install it, we'd either need to have Windows Subsystem Linux (WSL) enabled and that battle is likely more uphill than just installing devdesktop. While there are other options for non-WSL—Cygwin and Cmder—they likely entail more ToS and security red tape. Powershell seems to be possible, so we could explore that. Additionally, our shop uses Docker so if we have WSL, we might as well install Docker and have the windows machine fall in line with the rest of our ecosystem.
2. DDEV has the same type of dependency as it runs on Docker. It does work using Hyper-V in addition to WSL, though that has same obstacles.

The other thing to consider is the need to have a fairly straightforward interface for the user to work with. While some folks are fine running everything in command line, the Windows user is not going to be as comfortable doing that.

All that being said, if there's a simpler way to run a Drupal site on a Windows machine with no additional Windows feature enabling, I'm all ears!

BEA has the same pain points as mentioned here. We will be testing Win10 soon as we are scheduled to migrate around first of year.

We have resorted to special development laptops (Win7 64bit) that have elevated rights, but are not part of the agency network, therefore no network resources can be accessed while developing. Developers can install what they need to develop. These laptops connect via agency MiFis or segregated Wifi-LANs that have the port access we need (SSH, etc). Those who telework obviously connect via personal ISP without issue.

The dev laptops have the access rights and apps needed to use our DVM—Vagrant, PuTTY, VBox and Cmdr.

You might ask or wonder about speed for development? Only during sync of DB does it take a few minutes. Pushing codebase takes seconds and once it is there a PR and merge are handled via Git and pipelines.

Hope this helps in your decision,

I say they should always be HTML pages.

I was going to offer some points, but someone in the British government already wrote a blog about HTML vs PDF (generally, not specifically regarding releases).

There are some great persuasion points in there that will likely be helpful:

- They do not change size to fit the browser
- They're not designed for reading on screens
- It's harder to track their use
- They cause difficulties for navigation and orientation
- They can be hard for some users to access
- They're less likely to be kept up to date
- They're hard to reuse

Hello All,

I was wondering if anyone could offer pros and cons of press releases as PDF compared to aspx pages.. We built <http://www.marylandattorneygeneral.gov/> with Sharepoint a few years ago. At that time, we opted to create press releases in PDF and store them in document libraries so we could display and search easily with webparts. We are finding difficulties in social sharing with the PDFs. It seems to me that most gov sites use web pages instead of PDFs for press releases. Thoughts?

Thanks!

I second the special development laptops Alec outlined here. This can work very well.

Alternatively, would it be possible to boot a GFE PC off of a USB drive with Linux on it, similarly to dual boot? Or is that restricted for most PC users across agencies?

- I would prefer to try ddev, but haven't secured the ok for Docker... would like to use Drupal VM, but would need to get permission to run Virtual Box... all of which appear to be bigger hurdles than ADD.

There was a really good session at DrupalCon Seattle this year – the results of the 2019 Developer Tool Survey Results were discussed as well as the pros/cons of each tool. It was really interesting! You can watch the recording and get the slides at: <https://events.drupal.org/seattle2019/sessions/what-should-i-use-2019-developer-tool-survey-results>

I still don't have anything on my Win10 GFE yet, but I'm eager to hear other success stories!

I'd be interested in that BOF. We will be transitioning from Mac to PC sometime next year.

Hmm, windows, as a Mac user and a fan of drush and command line tools, I prefer not windows. Sorry I can't be of help on that. Might be a good BoF to have at Drupal GovCon in July. Actually talk about best practices for running a local with drupal on windows. Perhaps a group of you might find a solution together.

Great question!

1. We hadn't considered DVM yet. To install it, we'd either need to have Windows Subsystem Linux (WSL) enabled and that battle is likely more uphill than just installing devdesktop. While there are other options for non-WSL — C:\w\win and C\mder—they likely entail more ToS and security red tane options for both WSL - Cygwin and similar. They likely entail more TSC and security red tape.

Powershell seems to be possible, so we could explore that. Additionally, our shop uses Docker so if we have WSL, we might as well install Docker and have the windows machine fall in line with the rest of our ecosystem.

2. DDEV has the same type of dependency as it runs on Docker. It does work using Hyper-V in addition to WSL, though that has same obstacles.

The other thing to consider is the need to have a fairly straightforward interface for the user to work with. While some folks are fine running everything in command line, the Windows user is not going to be as comfortable doing that.

All that being said, if there's a simpler way to run a Drupal site on a Windows machine with no additional Windows feature enabling, I'm all ears!

I'm currently using devdesktop but hoping to move to DDEV or DVM soon as devdesktop has sometimes been problematic (upgrades killed theme files, sometimes devdesktop doesn't sync with acquia cloud and some other issues or bugs I've found).

Have you looked at the other ones first? And if you're still set on Acquia, honestly, suggest the change, they're pretty accommodating where they can be.

Hello fellow Content Managers,

We've recently found a need for using Acquia Dev Desktop for a couple users within Commerce. Naturally, the question about Terms of Service came up, and the software isn't listed on Digital.gov's negotiated ToS Agreements.

Before we go down the rabbit hole of working out our own ToS for this software. Have any other agencies out there done this? Can you share what you might have?

I think PDF and APSX are not comparable. I assume ASPX is markup like HTML or XML.

For a print-out, I like PDFs. If the semantics gain by a fixed page numbering - table of contents, index, ..., I select PDF. Like WYSIWYG, a PDF is page-based - same for reading and printing.

For something that depends on it's place in time, eg. where the date published matters, I also prefer PDF. I have found use for the information in a PDFs "Document Properties". I don't know of any equivalent, or common, practice in HTML. Sometimes I find it useful to try to understand things sequentially - lots of web page content lives outside of any temporal reference.

Personally, I save content in both forms - PDF and HTML. I also create content and distribute in both PDF and HTML. Sometimes together in a ZIP.

I work at a state department of Taxation. By file count, most our content is PDF, and most our PDFs display some form of a date. Rarely is there a way to guess when the web page you're visiting was last updated, or guess if it has changed since the last time you visited. I'm ignoring social media where I spend no time.

To me, there a place for files that print reliably, and a usefulness for content that seems to have been timestamped.

My $0.75.

Hello All,

I was wondering if anyone could offer pros and cons of press releases as PDF compared to aspx pages.. We built <http://www.marylandattorneygeneral.gov/> with Sharepoint a few years ago. At that time, we opted to create press releases in PDF and store them in document libraries so we could display and search easily with webparts. We are finding difficulties in social sharing with the PDFs. It seems to me that most gov sites use web pages instead of PDFs for press releases. Thoughts?

Thanks!

Couldn't agree more.

Web page all the way.

Once you set up a template (which is built into any modern content management system, it takes about 3 minutes to copy/paste from Word into a web page) and publish.

There are some great persuasion points in there that will likely be helpful:

- They do not change size to fit the browser
- They're not designed for reading on screens
- It's harder to track their use
- They cause difficulties for navigation and orientation
- They can be hard for some users to access
- They're less likely to be kept up to date
- They're hard to reuse

Hello, fellow Content Managers,

The Federal Web Council is working to make it easier for agencies to meet the requirements of the 21st Century Integrated Digital Experience Act (21st Century IDEA). However, we can't do that without understanding the issues and implementation challenges your organization is facing.

As we shared on June 12, we've set up an Ideascale instance to gather your questions in a transparent way, and allow constructive discussion around potential solutions. If you want to get involved, visit Ideascale and:

- Register for an account with your .gov email address
- Review the list of ideas already submitted to comment or vote on those you feel are important
- Submit a new question or idea (or email your idea to me, if you don't have time to log in to Ideascale, and I'll share it with the community for you.)

We would love to hear about potential solutions your organization is working on, particularly related to the questions posed in Ideascale. Discussions are already happening around forms, website modernization, and more, so jump in.

The findings from this exercise will be shared with OMB, and influence what guidance is developed to help federal agencies comply with the Act - so please log in today and make your voice heard. The site will be open through the end of this week.

Thanks!
